There remains for Stalin a vast field of expansion in the little countries of Eastern Europe.

Naturally one must take into account the rights of those two loyal nations, Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia, without omitting the total recuperation of the territories which have been temporarily snatched from great Russia.

After having dismembered the Reich and after having reattached various zones to other countries, thus creating new nationalities, the German danger will be removed from the U.S.S.R., from Europe, and from the entire world.

As for Turkey, I must understand the necessary assurances which Churchill has given to President Inonu in his name and in my own.

The ports of the Mediterranean which is to be given to Stalin must suffice him.

As for Asia, we are in accord with his demands, barring subsequent complications.

As for Africa, what can we do?

It will be necessary to give something to France to compensate for her losses in Asia, and also something to Egypt, as has been promised to the Wafdists; it will be necessary, too, to give to Spain and to Portugal some compensation for their sacrifices and to bring about a better world equilibrium.

The United States, likewise by right of conquest, will inevitably claim some vital point as its zone. And that will be justice.

Finally, we will have to accord to Brazil the little colonial expansion which she has been promised.

Kindly transmit to Stalin, my dear Mr. Zabrowsky, that for the general good and for the rapid annihilation of the Reich, all these things are only general ideas submitted for study—he will have to yield in the matter of the colonisation of Africa.

Transmit to him, likewise, the assurance of my complete comprehension, of my fellow-feeling and of my desire to speed the solution of these problems.

To that end, the interview which I propose would present a practical interest.

Please read with the greatest pleasure, as I have already said, the generous terms of the message which has informed me of your decision to offer me, in the name of the national council, a copy of that which is the greatest treasure of Israel: a scroll of the Torah. This letter evidences my acceptance of your loyalty. I respond with the greatest confidence.

Please, I beg you, transmit to the high organization over which you preside the expression of my gratitude in connection with the banquet given on the occasion of its 31st anniversary.

I wish you the greatest success.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

NOTE: Numerous other letters were unearthed but this letter serves to emphasize the villainous character of the operations that were discussed by Stalin and Roosevelt and the Zionist hierarchy.
