In a recent issue of McCall's magazine, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt wrote that her late husband had unwillingly debarred Negroes forever from buying, renting or inhabiting any part of his real estate promotion in the Warm Springs region of Georgia, only because Georgia law required him to do so. Now along comes one of Pegler's correspondents to say that there never has been a racial restrictive clause, and that Mr. Roosevelt imposed the restrictions himself. Pegler, now properly incensed, demands to know who owns the magazine that dares to print the widow's propaganda.

To the rescue comes another of Pegler's never ending corps of mystery correspondents. The financial editor of a Seattle paper writes that McCall's has run this trash for years without notable qualms. He continues on to say that the President of McCall's is Arthur Langlie, self confessed Modern Republican, former Governor of Washington by the grace of Dave Beck. The owner of the corporation is Norton Simon, president of the United Can Co., a West Coast big shot. So Peg is naturally mystified by the [illegible] McCall Corporation, Wilmington,
