Old parachute wasn't from famed hijacker

Cowlitz County Sheriff Les Nelson says a parachute found in the Kalama River area last Wednesday was definitely not one used by D.B. Cooper in the skyjacking of a Northwest Orient Airlines jet on Nov. 24, 1971.

"We checked with the FBI Tuesday, and they say this is neither the type nor color of the chutes Cooper had," Nelson said.

The parachute turned over to the sheriff's office Monday had a small tag bearing the words "U.S. Air Force," he said, and appeared to be a drag chute.

It was discovered by a logger, Darrell G. Ray of 118 Red Row, Kelso, near the 6257 line off Kalama River Road.

The chute had been buried under vegetation, and appeared to have been in the woods for a long time, according to the sheriff's office.

Bill Williams, an FBI spokesman in Portland, said the chute is not related to the skyjacking case, even though it was found in the general area where Cooper is believed to have left the plane.

The man using the name D. B. Cooper boarded the jet bound from Portland to Seattle on Thanksgiving eve 1971. During the flight he threatened to blow up the plane with a bomb he claimed to have in a briefcase unless he was given ransom money.

After the aircraft landed in Seattle, he freed the passengers and was given $200,000 cash and four parachutes. He ordered the plane to fly to Reno, but opened the rear airstair over Southwest Washington, and bailed out.

No trace has been found of the skyjacker, the ransom money or the parachutes.

Possible D.B. Cooper clue found

KELSO — (AP) — A heavy plastic placard from a Boeing 727, found by a hunter in a thickly wooded area, could be a link to the unsolved November 24, 1971, D.B. Cooper skyjacking, authorities said today.

Cooper is thought to have parachuted from a Northwest Airlines jet near Woodland, about 10 miles south of here, with $200,000 in $20 bills.

The placard is described as an emergency-warning notice of the type posted next to the rear exit of 727s.

"There isn't any way that it could have come off a plane without the (rear) door being opened," said the Cowlitz County sheriff, Les Nelson. "We know that two days after Cooper jumped that the placard was missing off the plane."

"This is the first probable, tangible piece of evidence that has surfaced in the D.B. Cooper case," he added. "It's inconceivable, it's one in a million, that any other plane could have lost it in the area in which D.B. Cooper jumped."

The placard was found about "six flying minutes" from where Cooper is believed to have jumped, said Nelson. It was found last November by an elk hunter, Carroll Hicks, of Kelso, near a Weyerhaeuser Co. logging road north of Ariel, said Nelson.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation and sheriff's detectives withheld information about the find while trying to verify the placard's origin, he said.

The jet was en route to Seattle from Portland when Cooper handed a stewardess a note saying he had a bomb. After picking up the ransom and two parachutes in Seattle, and allowing the passengers and two of three stewardesses to disembark, Cooper ordered the plane to Reno. When the plane landed in Reno, the rear ramp was down, and the money, one parachute and Cooper were gone.

After 8 years, D.B.Cooper hijacking*remains a mystery

by CLYDE JABIN

United Press International

PORTLAND — Thanksgiving time has special meaning for Ralph Himmelsbach, Federal Bureau of Investigation agent, especially this year.

It marks the eighth anniversary of his search for D.B. Cooper, who parachuted from a skyjacked jetliner to oblivion with $200,000 in $20 bills on Thanksgiving eve, 1971.

Himmelsbach has put in thousands of hours, more than any other law-enforcement official, trying to catch Cooper, and it will be his last Thanksgiving on the case. He takes mandatory retirement next September 30 after 28½ years with the F.B.I.

Cooper boarded a Northwest Orient Airlines Boeing 727 jetliner in Portland, took control of the aircraft by threatening to explode a "bomb" in his briefcase, forced it to land in Seattle where he got the ransom money, then parachuted into the Southwest Washington wilderness. No trace of him or the money ever was found.

Himmelsbach says he will not retire frustrated if he does not solve the case.

"It hasn't been frustrating, it has been fascinating," he said. "It has been interesting every step of the way."

The F.B.I. approach also is directed against getting too emotionally tied up in a case, he said, since an agent then would not be as effective.

"I do not have an ax to grind," he said of Cooper.

Himmelsbach, who spent Thanksgiving eve, 1971, listening to the radio communications, recalls how the pilot mentioned during the flight from Seattle that he thought Cooper had jumped because of a "low pressure bump." The agent said this bump, which also registered on the flight recorder at 8:11 p.m., occurred when the door in the tail of the plane swung back partially shut after Cooper jumped.

Two F-106 fighter pilots from McCord Air Force base were following the airliner after it left Seattle en route to the Cooper-ordered destination of Reno, Nev., but the fighter pilots did not see Cooper jump.

On Thanksgiving Day, Himmelsbach spent two hours flying with a Civil Air Patrol pilot in a small aircraft, crisscrossing the densely forested area where it was computed that Cooper went down in the Lake Merwin region.

"We didn't see a thing," the agent said.

The next day, an Army unit from Fort Lewis was brought in to search the northeast Clark County area. The soldiers found nothing.

The only item that has ever turned up from the flight was the 727's rear door plastic plaque, apparently torn off by wind, found last January 12 miles north of where Cooper was believed to have jumped.

"Cooper had to have a stewardess put the door down during the flight," said Himmelsbach, adding that she then returned to the pilot's cabin. "That was the last time anyone saw him before he jumped."

Himmelsbach said the F.B.I. has been able to pretty well determine what happened during the hijacking, but has no clues as to who Cooper actually is or how the skyjacker got to Portland International Airport.

The agent thinks Cooper got the idea for the crime from a news report two weeks before about a hijacking attempt in Canada where the man was captured before the plane got off the ground.

Himmelsbach said the F.B.I. continues work on the mystery.

"We've pledged to the public and to ourselves to give everything a hard look," he said.

Himmelsbach said not every "little detail" on the case has been made public — for instance, the colors of the two parachutes Cooper got from the airliner and used in leaving the plane with the money. He said this gives agents a "little edge" to eliminate the "phonies" who either attempt to pin the crime on an acquaintance or to claim they did the skyjacking themselves.

The agent said that in addition to the official time on the case he has also flown over the area of the parachuting in his own plane or on other flights.

"I always look to see if I can see something," Himmelsbach said.

Details of the hijacking have become as well known to residents around Lake Merwin as the Indian legends of the area.

For the past few years, a tavern at Ariel on the edge of the lake has held a Thanksgiving eve "D.B. Cooper party" for the hijacker — or anyone else who might want to drop in.

Thus far, the guest of honor has not showed up.

A merry-maker from Cooper's Caper Days two years ago. The yearly event in Ariel fetes D.B. Cooper's 1971 disappearance

Cooper's Caper Days

Ariel set to cheer hijacker's leap

By Richard Spiro
The Daily News

ARIEL — Saturday will be Cooper's Caper Days once more in this community, where hijacker D.B. Cooper, burdened with $200,000, might have jumped from the rear door of a Boeing 727 on Nov. 24, 1971.

David R. Butterfield, publicity chairman for this more or less prestigious event, plans to whomp up 30 gallons of loggers' stew outdoors near the Ariel Store and Tavern.

Rumors that he will not be allowed to prepare the stew inside the store because the effluvia would dangerously weaken the rafters is described by Butterfield as arrant nonsense.

There have been some changes since the celebration was first thrust upon the helpless populace. Dave and Laurel Fisher, one-time Californians, now own the store. And instead of buffalo stew, Butterfield has to make do with loggers' stew because the buffalo have all gone to that happy hunting ground.

No one knows where Cooper has gone, but there is more than a slight suspicion that he too is roaming that happy hunting ground, where the $200,000 he extorted from Northwest Orient Airlines will do him no good.

Butterfield notes that the celebration this year will be spiced up a bit because earlier a sign from the rear door of a Boeing 727 was found in the area. More recently an orange and white parachute turned up in a wooded area of the county. The FBI says it was not one used by Cooper.

The only hard and fast facts, however, are that neither Cooper — if indeed that is his name — nor the money has ever been found.

Meanwhile, back at the Ariel Store the pot-bellied stove will valiantly attempt to keep the place warm while theories as to the hijacker's fate circulate with the other hot air from the stove.

Cooper may or may not be alive, but he lives, and apparently will continue to live among other legends of the great Northwest.

Hijack high jinks to mark Dan Cooper's 1971 leap

By LEVERETT RICHARDS
of The Oregonian staff

ARIEL, Wash. — They'll have another party Saturday in this hamlet 10 miles east of Woodland.

There will be loggers' stew and loggers' brew and much to-do over the elusive guest of honor at the Ariel Store and Tavern, which will hold open house from noon to midnight or whenever.

"We don't know whether the guest of honor will show up or not, but we have broadcast invitations far and wide to Dan Cooper, wherever he is," said Laurel Fisher, who with her husband, David, own the emporium in this tiny timber town made famous by Cooper, the first of the high-flying, high-finance hijackers.

Cooper made history eight years ago, on Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, Nov. 24, when he hijacked Northwest Airlines' flight 305 in Portland, bailed out at 8:10 p.m. that stormy night near Ariel — and vanished.

Not a trace of the man who gave the name of Cooper or any of the 10,000 $20 bills he carried has been found, despite a series of intensive searches by ground and air over the flight's route from Seattle to Reno, during which Cooper is believed to have bailed out in freezing weather in a howling storm.

The FBI continues to get "Cooper calls," said Bill Williams, FBI spokesman in Portland. The latest was a parachute found Nov. 7 near the Kalama River Road, which proved to have no connection with the Cooper case.

But that doesn't discourage the sponsors of "Cooper Capers Day," which has been held since 1975.

"People will be dropping in all day, sitting around the wood stove or the 30-gallon stew pot, swapping lies and maybe buying a few of the 'Hijacker's Guide' book we have for sale or the T-shirts which say 'I was there, D.B. Cooper Day, '79,'" Mrs. Fisher said.

There will also be sky divers parachuting into town about noon.

"Maybe Cooper will be among them, who knows?" Mrs. Fisher added.

If hijacker had invested Art could've made Cooper rich

By LES BLUMENTHAL

SEATTLE — If Dan Cooper had invested the $200,000 he skyjacked eight years ago in Oriental rugs, apartment houses or Charles Russell paintings, he'd be a millionaire today.

Maybe he is.

Authorities don't know if Cooper, history's first known skyjacker-for-money, is dead or alive. But they have found no trace of him since he dived out the back end of a Northwest Airlines 727 jetliner with a parachute and disappeared into the night over Southwestern Washington on Nov. 24, 1971.

If he lived and was shrewd he could have parlayed the 21 pounds of $20 bills into a fortune. The money was in a bag strapped to his chest.

Maybe the man who bought his ticket as "Dan Cooper" but was transformed in history as "D.B. Cooper" put the money in stocks, bonds or foreign exchanges. Maybe he's sitting in an Acapulco condominium laughing.

Or as Steve Morris, a Seattle antique dealer said, "He's probably living in east Ballard (a Seattle neighborhood), paying for groceries with the $20 bills he got and wishing he had bought gold."

"There is really no end to the money he could have made if he had invested in antiques," claims Morris, a member of the Appraiser Association of America.

could have tried real estate.

"That's where I would have put it," said John Teutsch Jr. of Rainier Mortgage Co.

Teutsch said Cooper could have used the money for a down payment on a $1 million apartment building that would be worth $2 million today, even more if the units had been converted to condominiums.

"Eight years ago Seattle was just coming out of the Boeing crash. You could buy $20,000 to $25,000 houses all over the place. Those houses would be worth up to $70,000 apiece now," said Teutsch.

Steven Haley of Friedlander & Sons, a Seattle jewelry store, says Cooper could have invested in a "traditional form of concentrating wealth" by buying diamonds.

Diamonds are worth up to three times as much now as they were in 1971.

"Nowadays, a five-carat stone costs about $50,000. Back then it cost about $15,000," said Haley.

John Pringle, assistant special agent in charge of the Seattle FBI office, said Friday, "We don't have any more idea where he is now than when he pulled the job."

Pringle says it's possible Cooper could have spent the money without anyone knowing, even though authorities had the serial numbers of the bills.

While American citizens couldn't own gold in 1971, Cooper could have bought the precious metal on the Swiss exchange for between $125 and $150 an ounce back then, said Haley. Gold now sells for over $390 an ounce.

Portland, Ore.

A $200,000 investment in Oriental rugs in 1971 would be worth $1.8 million now, said Morris.

Antique American furniture has quadrupled in price, antique silver is worth five times what it was in 1971, American paintings of the 19th and early 20th centuries are up tenfold.

"A Charles Russell painting worth $25,000 in 1971 would now be worth between $150,000 and $200,000," said Morris.

he year 1979. It was on that day that the world lay dark, not by the evening twilight, but by the darkness of Eve in Los Angeles, and evidence that D.B. Cooper was in at the time he had inter-connection named Byron "Jack" Coffelt who survived the jump and escaped. The FBI and various media outlets have spent considerable time investigating the Coffelt-Cooper connection, yet his story has never been explained.

A middle-aged man, dressed in a black suit, white shirt and black tie and a dark jacket, walked up to the Northwest Airlines counter. He was about 6 feet tall and of medium build and carried a briefcase. He gave his name as Dan Cooper and paid cash for a one-way ticket on flight 305 to Seattle. The ticket agent punched the wrong key and the name came out "D.B. Cooper."

A few minutes after takeoff, the misnamed passenger handed a stewardess a note threatening to blow up the plane with a hidden bomb if he didn't receive $200,000 cash and two parachutes. The plane went to Seattle, where an FBI agent brought the ransom to the cabin door and handed it to a stewardess. Then, as the plane continued on toward Reno, Nev., with its rear door open, as the hijacker had instructed, D.B. Cooper jumped into the night — and became a legend in American crime.

The massive manhunt that began the next day in the mountainous terrain that Cooper jumped into was only the beginning. In the eight years since the famous incident, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has expended thousands of man-hours trying to lay down leads on some 800 suspects. Yet, the official line is still that an unknown man hijacked flight 305 that night and probably died in the parachute jump — though his body, the chute and the money were never found. In the mid-1980s, unidentified Cooper was still a mystery.

It is a mystery story — though an investigation has turned up some evidence suggesting that Coffelt was Cooper, including two passengers on the hijacked airplane who saw photos of Coffelt and identified him as the hijacker.

The story also has intriguing characters — including alleged bungling FBI agents, a rich right-wing recluse who is the last living relative of Abraham Lincoln and the convicted assassin of Martin Luther King Jr., James Earl Ray.

Much of Jack Coffelt's life is shrouded in mystery, and that's undoubtedly the way he wanted it. This picture of his life was pieced together from interviews with various knowledgeable sources, including journalists and lawmen.

Coffelt, who was born in 1916, spent the first 30 years of his life in and out of jails throughout the Midwest for a variety of minor crimes. In 1945, he hit the big time: He received a 10-year sentence for interstate transportation of a stolen automobile, and served time in Atlanta and Leavenworth federal prisons. Over the years, his cell mates reportedly included Col. Jack Durant, who was convicted of stealing the Hesse crown jewels during World War II; James Earl Ray, who is presently serving a life sentence for killing Martin Luther King Jr.; and James Brown, an Army officer convicted of serving time on an assault charge.

Sometime during those prison years, Coffelt and the FBI apparently made contact. A source, who requested anonymity, says there is a letter signed by J. Edgar Hoover asking the prison warden for information about Coffelt, as well as evidence that the agent in charge of the local FBI office in Atlanta was Coffelt's sole visitor for five years.

Some persons who have studied Coffelt's past suspect that he became an FBI informant in prison, perhaps secretly turning over information damaging to his cell mates. Certain sources add that Coffelt himself described his days in the pen as a "revolving door," claiming that he would be let out for a few days or weeks at a time to carry out "a job" for the government.

The FBI refused to comment on any of this or on any other aspect of Coffelt's life.

In 1955, after serving only six years of his 10-year sentence, Coffelt was paroled from Leavenworth.

In the mid-60s, he began a mysterious association with Robert Todd Lincoln Beckwith, the last living relative of Abraham Lincoln.

Beckwith — Lincoln's great-grandson — is the son of rich industrialist Warren Beckwith, and he lives on a sprawling 500-acre estate in Virginia. The land came from the Lincoln side of the family; Beckwith inherited it from his mother, who acquired the estate from her father, Lincoln's son-in-law.

Beckwith had not been idle with his wealth, a six-figure annual income from a lifetime trust set by his father. He has reportedly financed several right-wing causes.

Coffelt became Beckwith's aide-de-camp and got control of more than one Beckwith-financed bank account. But little else is known about this mysterious relationship, which Beckwith himself declines to clarify.

Other bits and pieces have emerged about this period of Coffelt's life:

In 1974, Coffelt boasted to an old friend, former Atlanta cell mate James Brown, that he had "helped kill a nigger" in Memphis, Tenn. Then, elaborating slightly, he said that he had been in "one of the white cars" that caused confusion around Memphis immediately after Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated in 1968.

In 1972, James Earl Ray was shown a picture of Coffelt by someone investigating the Coffelt-Cooper connection, and reportedly identified his old prison mate — but only after being shown Coffelt's death certificate. Ray gave no further information, according to a source close to the investigation.

Coffelt allegedly carried a number of official credentials: FBI, Department of Agriculture, passes for the White House and Pentagon. A college professor reported that he was riding in an automobile with Coffelt in Washington, D.C., when Coffelt picked up Gen. Creighton Abrams, U.S. Army chief of staff (now deceased) and took him to the Pentagon. This professor has claimed that he saw Coffelt flash FBI credentials.

Sometime around 1970, Beckwith fired Coffelt. It was a bitter parting. In 1973, Beckwith settled a suit filed by Coffelt reportedly by giving his former aide a pension equal to $750 per month, retroactive to 1963. (The settlement papers are sealed by court order.)

Beckwith is still alive at about 60 years of age. But he lives in seclusion, and has declined repeatedly to be interviewed on his relationship with Coffelt.

After the break with Beckwith, Coffelt spent the next couple of years in Washington, D.C., and, for brief periods of time, in Lawrence, Kan. He held a string of odd jobs during this time and was described as being ~~drinking~~ and drinking heavily during 1971.

Some who have investigated Coffelt theorize that his deteriorated financial situation after his break with Beckwith may have driven him to try the desperate hijacking of Flight 305.

Eleven days after the Cooper hijacking, Coffelt began a job as a surgical technician at a hospital in Virginia. His superior there, a woman, told sources that Coffelt had difficulty walking and that one point showed her his "badly discolored legs" — injuries which some believe he sustained in the parachute jump. He worked at the hospital through most of 1972, then in June of 1973 he contacted his old cell mate, James Brown, for the first time in years.

A year later, in May 1974, Coffelt told Brown for the first time that he was D.B. Cooper and disclosed some details of the crime that, if true, presumably only the hijacker could have known. For example, according to Brown, Coffelt described changing into boots before jumping and boasted of flirting with one of the stewardesses. Coffelt also said that he dropped the $200,000 ransom during the parachute jump and had never recovered it.

Coffelt told Brown that he wanted to go back into the Cascades and look for the small fortune, but he needed help. Brown agreed to accompany him, and in July of that year, the two men and Brown's muscular, 6-foot-plus, 17-year-old son, Byron, made a weeklong trek into the mountains.

According to Brown, Coffelt was then so ill that at one point he nearly collapsed on a steep grade. However, after a week in which they made themselves as inconspicuous as possible, they found no money and quit.

Still, to this day, James Brown remains unshaken in his conviction that his old cell mate was D.B. Cooper.

After the Cascades trip, Coffelt moved to Hawaii and died there in June 1975. Brown, who did not learn about Coffelt's death for more than a year, had written down everything Coffelt told him, and began writing a book manuscript. But he knew he needed help, preferably from a promoter familiar with Hollywood wheeling and dealing.

Brown found free-lance producer Dick Summers, who was in Las Vegas while producing a Ken Norton heavyweight title fight for CBS Sports.

Summers said in an interview that he subsequently had Brown and his son take lie-detector tests concerning the five weeks they spent with Coffelt. "They passed with flying colors," Summers said. "But all that meant was that Brown believed Coffelt's story. I kept thinking, if this story is true, it's the story of the century."

Summers began his own investigation, and he and Brown organized an expedition into the Cascades in 1977, back to where Coffelt had taken Brown three years earlier. This time, thanks to a metal detector and energetic digging, the search party unearthed a solid piece of physical evidence: a 1½-inch piece of cording that proved to be synthetic nylon of the type used in parachute shrouding — and it was 5 to 7 years old.

"It's a strong piece of circumstantial evidence," said Summers. "We had a lab report confirming that (the) cording ... was from a parachute and several years old. No one has ever asked me, but I'll be happy to take a lie-detector test about where we found it, and how we dug it up. We were very careful uncovering it. I took soil samples which I turned over to the lab so I would know something hadn't just been buried there."

"The area where we found this was very primitive, remote wilderness," Summers explained. "This was Big Foot country. We had to lower ourselves down a cliff to get to the site. There was a dead tree that Jack (told Brown) said he hit. And this enormous, two-story high rock with markings on it, 'Xs' and 'Os' that Coffelt said he had scratched into the rock the night he landed there. That was where we dug. You could even see the narrow trenches, where his feet had hit the ground."

Summers has been a believer in the story, and he, too, is still convinced that Jack Coffelt was D.B. Cooper.

In addition, Summers believes that the FBI has gone to great lengths to cover up and otherwise derail the case.

Summers added he suspects that the FBI may have known all along that Coffelt was the hijacker, but didn't go after him because they knew he had stories to tell about his earlier cooperation with the agency.

Search for 1971 hijacker leads to mysterious ex-con

The year was 1971. It was a dark, stormy Thanksgiving Eve in Portland, Ore., and at the busy Portland International Airport, everyone seemed to want to be somewhere else this night, preferably with family and loved ones preparing for the next day's feast.

A middle-age man, dressed in a black suit, white shirt and thin black tie and wearing a hat, walked up to the Northwest Airlines counter. The man, who was about 6 feet tall and of medium build and carried a briefcase, gave his name as Dan Cooper and paid cash for a one-way ticket on Flight 305 to Seattle. The ticket agent punched the wrong key and the name came out "D.B. Cooper."

- Q. Is there a reward offered for his apprehension?
A. Yes, a negotiable reward through the insurance company for Northwest Orient Airlines and various northwest newspapers may be available, only after such time as the FBI verifies the information and handles this matter through the federal court system.

A summary of the violation is as follows:

THE CRIME

On November 24, 1971, a lone white male boarded Northwest Orient Flight #305 at Portland, Oregon. At approximately 3:22 P.M., while the flight was en route to Seattle, Washington, he indicated to the stewardess that his brief case contained a bomb which would blow up the plane unless his demands were met.

The hijacker demanded $200,000 and four parachutes in exchange for the safety of the 36 passengers aboard the plane. When the aircraft landed at Seattle, Northwest Orient Airlines complied with his instructions. After he received the parachutes and money, the hijacker allowed all passengers and the two airline stewardesses to deplane.

He then ordered the remaining crew members into the first-class section of the aircraft and informed them he desired to fly to Mexico City. The hijacker instructed that the plane proceed in a southerly direction and fly at a low altitude and slow speed which would enable the rear door of the plane to be opened during the flight.

The hijacker apparently bailed out somewhere between Seattle, Washington, and Reno, Nevada, where the plane landed to refuel. It was determined the hijacker, two parachutes, and the ransom money had disappeared when the plane was inspected at Reno, Nevada.

Artist conception drawings of the aircraft hijacker were prepared by the FBI Exhibit Section and are considered a reasonable likeness. The black and white composite was prepared initially and sometime later the color composite was prepared to depict the hijacker's complexion and age more graphically.

The hijacker is described as follows:

Race:	White
Sex:	Male
Age:	Mid 40s
Height:	5'10" to 6'
Weight:	170 to 180 lbs.
Complexion:	Olive, Latin appearance, medium smooth.
Voice:	Low, spoke intelligently, no particular accent.
Characteristics:	Smoked Raleigh filter type cigarettes.
Wearing Apparel:	Black or brown suit; narrow black tie (clip-on type); black dress suit; black rain-type overcoat or dark top coat; dark briefcase or attache case; carried a brown paper bag - 4x12x14 inches; brown shoes.
Remarks:	Very polit at all times.

PRESS RELEASE

Arthur G. Barger, Special Agent in Charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for Oregon, has announced a development in a crime which began on the night of November 24, 1971, at Portland International Airport, Portland, Oregon, and has become widely known since that time as the D. B. Cooper Hijacking Case.

On the night before Thanksgiving, 1971, a man who gave the name Dan Cooper bought a one-way ticket on Northwest Airlines Flight 305 from Portland, Oregon, to Seattle, Washington. Upon departing Portland International Airport, Cooper notified a stewardess that he was hijacking the aircraft and displayed to her what he said was a bomb in his briefcase. The flight proceeded to Seattle, where after maintaining a holding pattern for several hours, it was permitted to land and refuel. After $200,000 and four parachutes demanded by the hijacker were brought on board, he released all of the passengers and all but four members of the crew. The flight then took off and proceeded south through Washington toward Reno, Nevada. The hijacker instructed that the flaps and gear remain lowered and the rear stair door open. As the aircraft passed over LaCrosse, Washington, cabin pressure fluctuation was observed, which was later determined to indicate his departure from the aircraft through the rear stairwell door. Since that time to this day of the hijacker, the parachutes, or the money has been found until Sunday, February 10, 1980.

On that date while on an outing with their children, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dwayne Ingram of Vancouver, Washington, discovered a sum of money partially buried by sand in the north river bank of the Columbia River, approximately five miles down river from the U.S. Interstate 5 bridge crossing between Portland and Vancouver, Washington. The Ingrams contacted the FBI and an examination of the badly decomposed $20 bills reveals that they bear serial numbers identical to a portion of those given to the hijacker. Because of the decomposed nature of the bills an exact estimate of the recovered money is not possible pending a laboratory examination, however, it appears to be several thousand dollars. The packaging and the numbered sequence indicate that the bills have not been separated and are in much the same order as when given to the hijacker. The bills will be sent immediately to the FBI Laboratory for additional examination.

It appears logical that the package of bills could have been carried downstream on one of the Washington tributaries of the Columbia River to the site where they were found.

Special Agents of the FBI from Oregon and Washington have secured the area and commenced an intensive search.

For the information of the media, those present at a news conference conducted at the office of the FBI, Portland, at 3:00 p.m. on February 12, 1960, were William M. Baker, Assistant Special Agent in Charge of the FBI for Oregon, Ralph P. Himmelsbach, Special Agent of the FBI, and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dwayne Ingram.

Part of D.B. Cooper money found

Compiled from news services

WASHINGTON — The Federal Bureau of Investigation has found about $4,000 of the money that the legendary hijacker, D.B. Cooper, carried with him when he parachuted from a commercial jet over Southwest Washington in 1971, a bureau spokesman said Tuesday.

The spokesman, who asked not to be named, said a family wandering along the banks of the Columbia River north of Portland, Ore., found a packet of money this week.

Held together by a rubber band, the packet of $20 bills was so badly deteriorated the F.B.I. could not make an exact count of the amount, the spokesman said.

Despite the deterioration, the spokesman said the F.B.I. was able to identify the money as part of the $200,000 ransom given to Cooper in Seattle nine years ago. When the money was given to the hijacker, the F.B.I. kept records of the serial numbers.

The packet was found 20 miles downstream from the point where Cooper is believed to have bailed out of the Northwest Airlines 727, the spokesman said.

He added that with floods along the river it was likely that in nine years the packet had been carried some distance.

The Portland and Seattle offices of the F.B.I. were conducting a search in the area, but the spokesman said it was unlikely that discovery of the money packet would aid in the search for Cooper, the only parachute-ransom hijacker in United States history who has not been apprehended.

Cooper boarded a Northwest flight in Portland on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971, using the name Dan Cooper. Before the plane reached Seattle, Cooper threatened to explode a "bomb" in his brief case if he were not given $200,000 in $20 bills and four parachutes and flown to Reno, Nev.

The plane circled Seattle for 2½ hours while authorities gathered the parachutes and money.

The passengers and two of the three stewardesses were allowed to leave the plane. The money and parachutes were loaded and the plane took off for Reno. The pilot was ordered to fly as slowly as possible.

Somewhere over Southwest Washington, the hijacker, the money and one of the parachutes disappeared out of the plane's rear exit, opened in flight. The approximate place of departure was guessed at from cabin-pressure readings on the flight recorder.

The flight recorder and crew testimony indicated Cooper had jumped near the little town of Ariel, Cowlitz County, about 30 miles north of Portland, a densely wooded area in the foothills of the Cascade Mountains.

Despite intensive searches of the area, the only item connected with the hijacking ever found was a rear door from the 727.

Nothing ever was seen of Cooper or the $200,000.

The F.B.I. has said since shortly after the hijacking it believed Cooper probably was killed when he landed.

In 1977, just to make sure the hijacker didn't escape prosecution via the statute of limitations, he was indicted on federal charges in absentia.

PORTLAND (UPI) — Ralph Himmelsbach, the Federal Bureau of Investigation agent who has headed the D.B. Cooper case since the 1971 hijacking, outlines this "possible scenario" to explain how some of the Cooper money washed up on the beach west of Vancouver:

"Probably the money (in the bag) came down close to the bank of a stream. When the water got high enough it washed downstream, bumping along the bottom. The bag finally degraded.

"Perhaps it could have burst on impact, but that is not likely. We think finally, tumbling down the river bottom, it broke open and the money was carried on, wearing off little bits and pieces around the edges, grinding it down like it had been ground with sandpaper or a file, leaving the center portion."

Mystery remains in the saga of D.B. Cooper

PORTLAND, Ore. — The mystery surrounding D.B. Cooper's skyjacking and disappearance eight years ago has been rekindled by a Vancouver, Wash., family's inadvertent discovery of worn packets of $20 bills on the Columbia River shoreline — part of Cooper's $200,000 ransom.

The saga which changed the nature of airline piracy began on Thanksgiving Day, 1971, when Cooper boarded Northwest Airlines flight 305 for a flight from Portland to Seattle. Once aboard, he handed a crew member a note, saying he was carrying a bomb in a satchel and wanted $200,000 in unmarked $20 bills.

When the jetliner landed at the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport that evening, authorities had arranged the cash and had also obtained four parachutes, as instructed by Cooper.

Cooper then allowed the flight's 36 passengers and all crew members but two pilots and one stewardess to disembark. He then ordered the aircraft to take off for Reno, Nev.

At one point in that flight, the crew felt a fluctuation in cabin pressure, which suggested the jetliner's rear cabin door had opened.

When the pilots attempted to talk to the hijacker by intercom, they got no response.

The FBI believes it is at that point — over La Center, Wash., about 25 miles north of Portland — that Cooper strapped on the bag of money and the satchel containing the supposed bomb, and leaped out.

He tumbled into the heart of a Pacific Northwest storm, with temperatures at the 10,000-foot altitude at the minus end of the thermometer. Authorities estimated Cooper experienced a headwind of up to 200 miles per hour.

He would have landed on the ground at a speed of 50-70 miles per hour, authorities calculated.

The FBI conducted numerous reconstruction flights over southwest Washington and employed complicated computer calculations to help determine where Cooper might have landed.

Ralph Himmelsbach, the FBI agent who has invested the past eight years on the case, concluded shortly after Cooper's jump that the daring man was killed in the attempt.

Exhaustive searches by the Washington National Guard and the FBI produced only one clue — a placard from the jetliner's rear door.

Hundreds of treasure hunters have prowled southwest Washington environs hoping to find the missing cash of Cooper.

Until the Harold Dwayne Ingram family made its discovery of a dozen packets of tattered $20 bills, those efforts had failed.

Cooper's daring and unorthodox air hijacking — which came to be known as a "skyjacking" — provoked other efforts to extort money from commercial airlines. That increase in airline piracy triggered the installation of beefed-up security systems at the nation's airports to spot potential hijackers.

Over the years, many people refused to believe that Cooper had died in his effort, and a few even claimed to be the mysterious skyjacker.

In one case, Byron "Jack" Coffelt, an ex-convict who claimed to be the mysterious hijacker, told a friend that he landed after parachuting from the airliner.

However, the site of the discovery of the D.B. Cooper ransom money is some 70 miles northwest of the area where Coffelt said he touched down.

The distance involved tends to belie Coffelt's story of the hijacking, which he told over a period of months in 1974 to an old friend who helped him search for the lost money. Coffelt died of apparent natural causes in Hawaii in 1975.

Further weakening Coffelt's claim of being Cooper is his assertion that he landed just east of Mt. Hood, which is about 25 miles south of the Columbia River.

Experts agree that even if the money entered the river at that point, it would be unlikely that it could wind its way down the wide waterway some 60 miles to where it was found on the north bank of the river.

"The money would have had to float through locks, reservoirs, spillways and power units on the Columbia," said a geologist with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in Portland. "I don't think it could have done that and been intact."

Robert Wagman, a producer for "60 Minutes" who has spent more than a year investigating Coffelt's claim to the D.B. Cooper legend, said, "Based on conversations I've had with FBI agents and engineers who know the river, it doesn't seem possible that the money could have washed up (where it was found) from where Coffelt said he lost it. It actually defies belief."

And some people still refuse to believe that Cooper is dead.

Journalist J.D. Reed, the author of the recently released fictional book "Free Fall," dealing with the Cooper adventure, said he disagrees with the FBI that finding the money tends to support the probability that D.B. Cooper did not survive the jump.

"It doesn't rule out that Cooper got away," said Reed.

An artist's sketches of D.B. Cooper based on recollections of passengers on the jet he hijacked and parachuted from in 1971.

The cash discovery has brought a new twist to the D.B. Cooper saga. Cooper was believed to have bailed out over La Center, Wash. But the money was found approximately 20 miles south of there.

D.B. and the money

V ANCOUVER, Wash. — Twelve packets of $20 bills, used eight years ago as part of the $200,000 paid to airline hijacker "D.B. Cooper," have been found on a Columbia River beach near here, the FBI announced yesterday.

Harold D. Ingram, 27, his wife, Patricia, 26, and their two sons, were picnicking on what is known as Tena's Bar last Sunday when their older son discovered the money.

Eight-year-old Brian Ingram was helping his father gather firewood and had scooped out sand for a fire. As his father was about to drop an armload of wood, young Ingram said, "Wait a minute, Daddy."

Recalling his find yesterday, Brian said, "I seen that money, I thought, wow."

But his parents remained calm, the son recalled. "They thought it was counterfeit."

The tattered and worn bills young Ingram found were the first to be recovered by law enforcement agencies since Nov. 24, 1971, when a passenger hijacked a Northwest Airlines Boeing 727.

The man, identified on the flight list as Dan Cooper, parachuted out of the airliner somewhere over southwestern Washington.

The serial numbers on the bills discovered by young Ingram matched those on the money given Cooper by the FBI in 1971.

William M. Baker, assistant agent in charge of the Portland FBI office, said discovery of the money lends credence to the FBI theory that Cooper died in the hijacking attempt.

Cooper's extortion effort was the first time a jet had been hijacked for ransom. A number of hijackings for cash have been carried out since the Cooper escape.

Baker said the FBI could not be certain how much money was in the packets, but said it amounted to "several thousand dollars."

The money has been sent to the FBI laboratory in Washington, D.C., and Baker hopes the lab will be able to pick fingerprints off the bills, which could lead to the suspect.

"That would be a hell of a break," he said.

The Ingrams had gone for an afternoon picnic on a 25-yard stretch of beach three miles west of Vancouver on the Columbia River, the state line between Washington and Oregon. The beach, which is popular with fishermen, is owned by a dairy and truck farming company.

Ingram, a painter, said in a news conference yesterday that the bills bound in three packets and wrapped in worn rubberbands were about six inches beneath the surface. Despite the find, the family continued with its picnic.

"It didn't look like I could spend it," the older Ingram said.

The family, which moved last year from Oklahoma to Vancouver, a town of about 40,000 across the Columbia from Portland, wasn't aware of the D.B. Cooper legend. Baker said the family contacted the FBI Monday afternoon only after learning about the hijacking from friends, who suggested the money might have been part of the missing loot.

After the Ingrams reported their discovery, the FBI immediately cordoned off a section of beach behind the truck and dairy farm operated by the New Columbia Gardens Co.

Fifteen to 20 FBI agents dressed in blue jeans and using shovels and rakes they had brought from their homes sifted through sand and driftwood along a 150-yard stretch around where the Ingrams found the cash.

Working from 10 a.m. until dusk yesterday, they found a few bits of bills buried from a half-foot to 3 feet beneath the surface near where the campfire had been. The FBI expected to use a backhoe today to dig even deeper.

Baker said one of the first chores for the agency will be to attempt to find how the money got to the beach. He said the FBI believes the money was washed up on the shoreline at a time when the Columbia was running high.

He said experts in hydrology and topography would be consulted to determine how the money got to the beach. The FBI has meticulously reconstructed flight conditions that existed at the time Cooper is believed to have jumped.

The FBI believes Cooper jumped out over the small Washington town of La Center, about 20 miles north of Vancouver. In nearby Ariel, Wash., a tiny town that has adopted Cooper as a folk hero, city fathers hold "Cooper Caper Days" each year on the anniversary of his jump.

Despite extensive searches employing the FBI, sheriff's departments from two counties in southwest Washington and the Washington National Guard, no trace of Cooper has been found.

"He's probably not alive today," said Dorwyn Schreuder, FBI agent supervising the continuing beach search. "If he were, I think he'd be with his money."

Ralph Himmelsbach, FBI agent leading the Cooper investigation for the past eight years, said the conditions under which Cooper parachuted underscored the fact that he died in the jump.

Himmelsbach said the FBI believes Cooper was wearing only a business suit and street shoes when he jumped at night into sub-freezing temperatures and winds of up to 200 miles an hour.

Even if Cooper should somehow have survived and is watching recent developments on television, he still isn't clear of the law. A federal grand jury in 1977 handed down an indictment against Cooper charging him with air piracy.

"Just in case..." said Baker.

Brian Ingram, 8, and his parents, Harold and Patricia, talk about their discovery from their Vancouver home.

Part of the ransom paid to skyjacker D.B. Cooper in 1971, discovered yesterday on a beach in Washington State.

Found by Family on Outing Part of 'D. B. Cooper' Loot

WASHINGTON—A young Vancouver, Wash., family on an outing along the Columbia River last Sunday suddenly stumbled across 12 stacks of moldering money—part of the $200,000 that the notorious airline hijacker "D. B. Cooper" made off with more than eight years ago, the FBI said Tuesday.

With the bills now having been traced definitely to the Cooper loot, 30 agents from the Portland and Seattle FBI offices have begun an extensive search of the area for more of the money—and possibly for some sign of Cooper or, more likely, his remains.

The money—"several thousand dollars," according to one official—was found in Washington about five miles northwest of the Interstate 5 bridge that spans the Columbia and separates Washington from Oregon, FBI agent William M. Baker told a news conference in Portland.

Discovery of the money by Harold Dwayne Ingram, 27, his wife, Patricia, 26, and their sons, 8 and 3, marked the latest twist in the bizarre saga of the now-legendary Cooper, who parachuted from a Northwest Airlines jetliner on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971, never to be seen or heard from again. When found by the Ingrams, the stacks of $20 bills were bound by decomposing rubber bands, the FBI said. But there was "no trace of D. B. Cooper," according to the agency.

Shortly after the hijacking, a cult sprang up around D. B. Cooper, a name that never has been traced to its origins.

A private club was named in his honor, D. B. Cooper T-shirts were manufactured, bumper stickers were run off and anniversary parties were held.

Baker said in Portland that whether Cooper got away with the rest of the money was an open question.

Law enforcement authorities long have believed that Cooper died in his plunge from the Boeing 727 because he was wearing only a business suit and street shoes when he jumped into a howling wind and freezing rain in an unreliable parachute. It has been estimated that he hit the ground at a speed of 50 to 70 m.p.h.

The saga began when "Cooper" boarded the jetliner in Portland for an evening flight to Seattle. Once airborne, he demanded that the airline have $200,000 in $20 bills and three parachutes on hand when the plane landed in Seattle. He threatened to blow up the plane if his demands were not met.

The airline complied, providing the parachutes and money. However, the FBI said Tuesday that the serial numbers of the bills had been recorded.

Cooper permitted the airliner's 36 passengers to leave the plane in Seattle. He then ordered the crew to take the plane to Reno and told the pilot to fly at a relatively low altitude and to open the plane's rear stairway.

Crew members last heard his voice on the plane's intercom when they were over the Washington-Oregon border. They said they believe he jumped, using the least reliable parachute.

The decomposed money was found 17 to 20 miles from the jump site by the Ingrams' older son, Brian. The bills were partly buried in sand that the Ingrams were scooping out to build a fire.

"Here's some more wood for the fire, Daddy," the father recalled his son as saying.

"It wasn't wood," Ingram said. "He (Brian) thought he had struck it rich."

Ingram said he assumed the bills might be part of the Cooper money. He turned them over to the FBI, adding with a smile that they were so decomposed, "I couldn't have spent it."

In leafing through the rotting bills, Baker said, the FBI made about "nine or 10 immediate hits"—matches with the numbers of the missing money. The bills were flown to Washington for further analysis and tests by the FBI laboratory.

An FBI official said the packaging and number sequence of the recovered bills indicated they had not been separated and "are in much the same order as when they were given to the hijacker."

The initial search, confined to an area several hundred yards long and 40 yards wide, turned up "fragments of more money"—nothing more, Baker said. He said the money appeared to have washed up on the bank.

Once that search is completed, probably by this afternoon, a scaled-down number of agents will move upstream, continuing the hunt.

Law enforcement officials in the Pacific Northwest have theorized that Cooper's body is at the bottom of Lake Merwin, 30 miles north of Portland, or that his bones are so entangled in giant wild blackberry bushes that they will never be found.

Ralph Himmelsbach, the FBI agent who has worked on the hijacking since it took place, said the money probably had been washed downstream from a Columbia tributary in Washington. But he said he doubted that it came from the Lewis River, the tributary that flows out of Lake Merwin.

Dear Sir,

I was reading the wednesday edition of the Portland Oregonian about the finding of the marked bills from the Cooper highjacking and noticed the sketch of the highjacker that i hadn't seen before. I recognized a great similarity between it and a man i rode on a bus with from New York City to Spokane last June the 8th.

As long as we were going to same state we sat together and he told me what he had been doing in New YORK. He had been living in Nassau on Long Island and doing odd work to get by on. He said he had A sister in Spokane and was going there. When we got to Chicago he bought my dinner and rode the rest of the way with A tourist who was going as far as we were.

Cooper parties will continue in Ariel

By Fran Kaiser
The Daily News Staff Writer

ARIEL — The party will go on — whether D.B. Cooper is found or not.

That assurance is from Laurel Fisher, owner of the Ariel Store and Tavern, where legend seekers gather each November to fete the famous skyjacker.

"We'll probably have the party forever," said Laurel, who spent the morning hosting television crews from as far away as Los Angeles after some of Cooper's loot was found near Vancouver.

Even if Cooper is found dead the party will continue as a memorial, she said.

"It means something to everyone up here. It's a legend. He sort of put Ariel on the map."

Authorities believe Cooper bailed out of the hijacked Boeing 727 near Lake Merwin in the area east of Woodland. Neither he nor $200,000 in loot was ever seen — until some of the money appeared Tuesday.

The money caused excitement in the small community on the Lewis River near Merwin Dam. Despite the find, some Ariel residents still say maybe Cooper dropped some of his money, but got away.

Laurel and her husband, David, bought the store 15 months ago and continued the traditional party started by the former owner.

About 300 people showed up for last November's party. Some, perhaps, hoped Cooper himself might be lured to the celebration if he's alive.

He's never shown, but he has an open invitation.

The Hero Left a Victim After All

By Darrell Bob Houston

The big 727-100 shot spray as it powered down the runway at Sea-Tac, leaving an oily rainbow in its wake. The pilot began his climb, grabbing altitude at more than 3,000 feet per minute. He leveled off at 30,000 in the vicinity of Mount St. Helens, home of the legendary Sasquatch and a landmark in the nine-year ground search for D.B. Cooper.

I looked up from my manuscript and studied the cabin. Seat C, Row 18. That's where Cooper had sat on Flight 305, chain-smoking his Raleighs and fondling that attache case with the five phony sticks of dynamite inside. Mr. Nice Guy with the Rotary Club smile and the cheap business suit. Tobacco stains on his teeth — and larceny in his heart.

I glanced at the ventral stairwell. That had been the key to D.B.'s dream-ship. Located under the center engine, it allowed him to climb out and jump without being sucked into a turbofan or sliced to carrots on the flaps.

Now, a large red sign proclaimed: This stairway cannot be opened in flight. The D.B. door was closed — for good. Cooper had changed the specifications of a fleet of $5 million airplanes. He had also made me a hero worshiper.

The stewardess came up the aisle. She stopped at my seat.

"I'm curious . . ." she began. My paranoia mounted. I fumbled around, trying to hide the manuscript that was open on my lap.

The stewardess was charmed by my modesty.

"You're a writer, aren't you?"

I mumbled a confession.

" . . . And that's a book manuscript?" Her smile was very white. I thought of the froth on a Wyoming trout stream.

Faking a coughing attack, I bent over the thick pile of pages that constituted my D.B. Cooper novel.

"What's your book about?"

I sat up straight.

"It's about a man," I said. "A man who figured that we're all riding on an airplane. Its name is Earth — and its zooming through the Void at something like 66,690 miles an hour.

"But even at that speed — or so his theory went — most people are still bored spiteless.

"This man gave us the answer: The only way to get off that angst-ridden airplane IS TO JUMP!"

I saw it coming — all the way to the nearest FBI interrogation room.

"What was his name?"

"D.B. Cooper," I whispered.

"Any relation to James Fenimore?"

The stewardess' wink said it all. I closed my eyes. I wanted to slip on my dark glasses — but why tempt fate any further? I would have to cringe openly.

I pretended to sleep all the way to San Francisco.

Emerson said that the trouble with heroes is not their ceramic feet. It's that eventually they become a pain in the ass.

I wonder if the Sage of Concord would have been all that blasé about the actural little gent who called himself Dan Cooper — especially if D.B. had kept him in groceries for almost 10 years.

When I think back to that stormy Thanksgiving Eve of 1971, the night Cooper half-gained his way to immortality, I find it hard to label him the criminal he officially is — dead or alive.

I was huddled in bed in my $50-a-month pad on Summit Avenue, listening to the radio and eating noodles with a pair of borrowed chopsticks.

The noodles were even colder than the apartment. But after the first flash about the parachute skyjack, it didn't matter.

Apologizing to my pet cockroach, William S. Burroughs III, I scratched around on the floor and found a dime. I called the Los Angeles Times. The editors assigned me to do a D.B. story.

I was elated. I would eat again. So would Burroughs, who was as sick of monosodium glutamate as I was.

The first national D.B. Cooper epic was laid out in the March 19, 1972 issue of the L.A. Times' West Magazine. It covered seven full pages with six diagrams and photographs. Included, too, was a song called "The Ballad of D.B. Cooper." The lyric was catchy — and forgettable.

Then, after the huge presses at Times Mirror Square had already kicked in, the editors had second thoughts. With several thousand copies run off, the Times pulled my story and replated — at considerable cost.

They said they loved the headline: "Coffee, Tea — or $200,000?" But they didn't want to glorify the skyjacker, who, after all, was a dangerous fugitive.

Now how in the hell was I going to rationalize that to a cockroach?

My hero-fixation surfaced next on a Seattle television show.

By that time I was really into my role. I had my own tacky attache case to go with my black suit and skimpy tie. I encouraged people to call me D.B. I wore my sunglasses — even on rainy days.

When my television host asked me if I thought Cooper was a new American hero, I was ready.

"Yes," I said. "He was a terrific hero. He screwed the System back — nonviolently, nonpolitically. He didn't hurt anybody, and he only took 200 grand.

"And best of all" — I had rehearsed the line for a week — "he didn't leave any footprints in the clouds."

The switchboard at the station turned into a pinball machine.

The most irate of the callers was Ernest K. Gann, the author and former airline pilot.

I still have a copy of the telegram he sent to the station the next day.

"The true depiction of all hijackers for what they are, instead of as heroes," it said in conclusion, "must be shown now or you and your loved ones may well, and very soon, be aboard the next of another Robin Hood's terrible adventures."

I fired back at Gann through Emmett Watson's column in The P.I. I repeated my favorite argument: D.B., with his lopsided grin and gentle manner, had left no victims.

I was not only smug. I was wrong.

The door to my apartment was ajar when I returned. A tall young woman sat at my writing desk. Blonde hair fell to her shoulders. Her posture struck me as incongruent to her beauty. Her slump was one of weariness — and defeat.

"You must have the wrong apartment," I said, from the doorway.

Her reply made no sense.

"I had a nervous breakdown after the skyjack," she said in a dull voice.

Excusing myself, I ducked into the bathroom. I wanted to wash my face, collect my wits. Dozens of D. B. Cooper freaks had sought me out over the years, but this was going too far. I fully expected this one to tell me that D. B. was really a woman.

When I came out of the bathroom my visitor was gone. I ran down the hall and out into the streets. Nothing. She had pulled a classic D. B. and vanished into the ozone.

I returned to my apartment, shaking my head. Still puzzled, I leafed through my Cooper scrapbook. There it was — an old advance copy of the magazine article the LA Times editors had killed in 1972.

One of the photographs showed the crew of the skyjacked 727 after the plane — sparks rising high from the still down ventral stairs — had landed at Reno.

Tina Mucklow, the stewardess Cooper held hostage on the plane, was sitting on her suitcase. Her long blonde hair was scraggly. Her posture was slumped — and somehow defeated.

I no longer worry about whether the woman who appeared at my apartment was real, imaginary — or a prankster. She simply was.

D. B. Cooper left more than a stack of cigarette butts when he bailed out into that freezing rainstorm. He left behind a victim, one who doesn't laugh at skyjacking jokes.

He leveled off at 30,000 in the vicinity of Mount St. Helens, home of the legendary Sasquatch and a landmark in the nine-year ground search for D.B. Cooper.

I looked up from my manuscript and studied the cabin. Seat C, Row 18. That's where Cooper had sat on Flight 305, chain-smoking his Raleighs and fondling that attache case with the five penny sticks of dynamite inside. Mr. Nice Guy with the Rotary Club smile and the cheap business suit. Tobacco stains on his teeth — and larceny in his heart.

I glanced at the ventral stairwell. That had been the key to D.B.'s dream-ship. Located under the center engine, it allowed him to climb out and jump without being sucked into a turbofan or sliced to carrots on the flaps.

Now, a large red sign proclaimed: This stairway cannot be opened in flight. The D.B. door was closed — for good. Cooper had changed the specifications of a fleet of $5 million airplanes. He had also made me a hero worshiper.

The stewardess came up the aisle. She stopped at my seat.

"I'm curious . . ." she began. My paranoia mounted. I fumbled around, trying to hide the manuscript that was open on my lap.

The stewardess was charmed by my modesty.

"You're a writer, aren't you?" I mumbled a confession.

" . . . And that's a book manuscript?" Her smile was very white. I thought of the froth on a Wyoming trout stream.

Faking a coughing attack, I bent over the thick pile of pages that constituted my D.B. Cooper novel.

"What's your book about?"

I sat up straight.

"It's about a man," I said. "A man who figured that we're all riding on an airplane. Its name is Earth — and its zooming through the Void at something like 63,660 miles an hour."

"But even at that speed — or so his theory went — most people are still bored spitless.

"This man gave us the answer: The only way to get off that angst ridden airplane IS TO JUMP!"

I saw it coming — all the way to the nearest FBI interrogation room.

"What was his name?"

"D.B. Cooper," I whispered.

"Any relation to James Fenimore?"

The stewardess' wink said it all. I closed my eyes. I wanted to slip on my dark glasses — but why tempt fate any further? I would have to cringe openly.

I pretended to sleep all the way to San Francisco.

Emerson said that the trouble with heroes is not their ceramic feet. It's that eventually they become a pain in the ass.

I wonder if the Sage of Concord would have been all that blasé about the actural little gent who called himself Dan Cooper — especially if D.B. had kept him in groceries for almost 10 years.

When I think back to that stormy Thanksgiving Eve of 1971, the night Cooper half-gained his way to immortality, I find it hard to label him the criminal he officially is — dead or alive.

I was huddled in bed in my $50-a-month pad on Summit Avenue, listening to the radio and eating noodles with a pair of borrowed chopsticks.

The noodles were even colder than the apartment. But after the first flash about the parachute skyjack, it didn't matter.

Apologizing to my pet cockroach, William S. Burroughs III, I scratched around on the floor and found a dime. I called the Los Angeles Times. The editors assigned me to do a D.B. story.

I was elated. I would eat again. So would Burroughs, who was as sick of monosodium glutamate as I was.

The first national D.B. Cooper epic was laid out in the March 19, 1972 issue of the L.A. Times' West Magazine. It covered seven full pages with six diagrams and photographs. Included, too, was a song called "The Ballad of D.B. Cooper." The lyric was catchy — and forgettable.

Then, after the huge presses at Times Mirror Square had already kicked in, the editors had second thoughts. With several thousand copies run off, the Times pulled my story and replated — at considerable cost.

They said they loved the headline: "Coffee, Tea — or $200,000?" But they didn't want to glorify the skyjacker, who, after all, was a dangerous fugitive.

Now how in the hell was I going to rationalize that to a cockroach?

My hero-fixation surfaced next on a Seattle television show.

By that time I was really into my role. I had my own tacky attache case to go with my black suit and skimpy tie. I encouraged people to call me D.B. I wore my sunglasses — even on rainy days.

When my television host asked me if I thought Cooper was a new American hero, I was ready.

"Yes," I said. "He was a terrific hero. He screwed the System back — nonviolently, nonpolitically. He didn't hurt anybody, and he only took 200 grand."

"And best of all" — I had rehearsed the line for a week — "he didn't leave any footprints in the clouds."

The switchboard at the station turned into a pinball machine.

The most irate of the callers was Ernest K. Gann, the author and former airline pilot.

I still have a copy of the telegram he sent to the station the next day.

"The true depiction of all hijackers for what they are, instead of as heroes," it said in conclusion, "must be shown now or you and your loved ones may well, and very soon, be aboard the next of another Robin Hood's terrible adventures."

I fired back at Gann through Emmett Watson's column in The P-I. I repeated my favorite argument: D.B., with his lopsided grin and gentle manner, had left no victims.

I was not only smug. I was wrong.

The door to my apartment was ajar when I returned. A tall young woman sat at my writing desk. Blonde hair fell to her shoulders. Her posture struck me as incongruent to her beauty. Her slump was one of weariness — and defeat.

VANCOUVER, Wash. — (AP) — Brian Ingram, the 8-year-old who uncovered some of D.B. Cooper's hijack loot, will get to keep one of the frayed $20 bills as a souvenir.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation also gave the Vancouver boy a certificate praising him for his discovery.

Brian was helping his father, Harold, build a fire on a Columbia River beach February 10 when he uncovered three bundles of weathered $20 bills. The bills were the first evidence uncovered in the case since Cooper hijacked the jetliner in 1971.

Found D.B.'s Loot!

Kids Dig Up Hijack Cash

By Neil Modie

More than eight years after D.B. Cooper parachuted into rainy darkness from a hijacked airliner, part of his $200,000 loot was found buried in a river bank near Vancouver, Wash., the FBI announced yesterday.

Badly weathered and apparently washed ashore from the Columbia River, the stacks of $20 bills say nothing encouraging about the fate of the legendary hijacker.

"It can tell you a number of things — either he dropped the money or he's dead," commented John D. Pringle, assistant special agent in charge of the FBI office in Seattle. "We can't tell at this point."

For Ralph Himmelsbach of Portland, the FBI agent in charge of the investigation since it began, the discovery reinforces his opinion that Cooper died after he parachuted from a Northwest Orient 727 trijet on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971.

BRIAN INGRAM
The money in the sand

Himmelsbach said the find reduced to "less than 50 - 50" the odds that Cooper is still alive.

The money was found Sunday by an 8-year-old Vancouver boy, Brian Ingram, and his 5-year-old cousin, Denise, as they were digging in the sand with sticks along the river bank during a family outing.

"This clue is the first we've had since the night of the occurrence," said Bill Baker, assistant special agent in charge of the Portland office, which the Ingram family contacted on Monday.

The money was found about 25 miles southwest of the area where the FBI had thought it most likely Cooper landed after he parachuted from the jetliner into a freezing rainstorm on Nov. 24, 1971.

The hijacker, who had used the name "Dan Cooper" to buy his airline ticket, boarded the jet in Portland, threatened to blow it up with what he claimed was a bomb in his briefcase, then forced it to land in Seattle to collect the ransom.

Cooper allowed 36 passengers aboard the flight to leave, then ordered the crew of four to fly it to Reno after $200,000 in marked bills and four parachutes demanded by the hijacker were brought on board.

As the southbound airliner passed over Southwest Washington, the hijacker — wearing only a business suit and street shoes — parachuted through a rear stairwell door.

As "Dan Cooper" became a legend, the name "D.B. Cooper" — as an FBI agent had initially identified him — became the name that stuck.

The FBI said his chances of survival were slim because he was lightly dressed for jumping into a howling wind and a freezing rain in a parachute not likely to work.

Agents have theorized that his remains are at the bottom of Lake Merwin, its forest of underwater snags entangling his parachute, or his bones are deeply enmeshed in giant blackberry bushes in the remote area 30 miles north of Portland and never will be found.

Regardless of Cooper's fate, Sunday's discovery was the first of any trace of the hijacker, the parachutes or the money.

The long frustrated FBI made simultaneous announcements of the find in Seattle, Portland and Washington, D.C., yesterday.

The crumbling stacks of $20 bills, and members of the Ingram family who dug it out of the sand, were put on display at an FBI press conference in Portland.

"An examination of the badly decomposed $20 bills reveals that they bear serial numbers identical to a portion of those given to the hijacker," Paul L. Mack, special agent in charge of the FBI's Seattle office, said in a statement.

"Because of the decomposed nature of the bills, an exact estimate of the recovered money is not possible pending a laboratory examination. However, it appears to be several thousand dollars.

"The packaging and the numbered sequence," Mack added, "indicate that the bills have not been separated and are in much the same order as when given to the hijacker."

The money was still held together with a rubber band, FBI agents said.

The bills are being sent to the FBI laboratory in Washington, D.C., for further examination.

"It appears logical that the package of bills could have been carried downstream on one of the Washington tributaries of the Columbia River to the site where they were found," Mack said.

The money was found on the Washington side of the Columbia about five miles downstream from the Interstate 5 bridge at Vancouver, where the river makes a sharp northward bend.

The discovery will probably steer agents away from the vicinity of Lake Merwin, which until now they had considered the most likely area for Cooper to have landed in his jump.

Lake Merwin is behind a dam on the Lewis River, which empties into the Columbia about 15 miles downstream from where the money was found. So it appears to mean the loot couldn't have washed down the Lewis River.

Agent Himmelsbach said the money could have washed down the Washougal River instead. If so, the agent said, Cooper's landing spot would have been about 25 miles farther south than the FBI had believed.

About 33 FBI agents from Portland and Seattle swarmed over the area where the money was found with shovels and rakes last night. An agent said they'd be back at work there today.

Treasure hunters and curiosity seekers were being kept away.

"We've got the area secured and it will be secured until we're through with it," Bill Williams, a spokesman for the Portland office of the FBI said.

The site is in a swampy dairy farming area, frequently flooded by the Columbia River.

During spring runoff, Williams said, the money could have been carried down a stream into the Columbia, "and then come downstream a little more every year."

Bits of $20 bills were found buried in as much as three feet of sand, Williams said. But he added that the depth wasn't remarkable considering the amount of flooding.

In the increasingly unlikely event that Cooper turns up alive, he will still face a federal charge of airline hijacking — and a possible death penalty.

As a precaution, a federal grand jury in Portland indicted "John Doe, also known as Dan Cooper," on Thanksgiving Eve 1976 — the last day before a five-year statute of limitations would have run out.

Agent said in Seattle yesterday that the FBI doesn't believe the statute of limitations would have applied anyway because it considers the crime a capital offense, for which there is no time limit.

The person happiest about the discovery of the ransom money may be Agent Himmelsbach, who is scheduled to retire from the FBI Feb. 29 after more than eight years of frustration with the hijacking investigation.

"I'm delighted," he said yesterday.

"We haven't gotten him off the ceiling yet," Williams said of Himmelsbach.

Williams said the second-happiest person may be a dairy farmer on whose property the money is believed to have been found. In the past, the agent said, the farmer has posted a sign charging fishermen and picnickers 25 cents to use his property.

"He'll probably be charging five dollars now," Williams said.

More Of D.B.'s Ransom Found

By Neil Modie

FBI agents yesterday found bits of more $20 bills buried in the sand beside the Columbia River near Vancouver, Wash., and said it was more of the $200,000 ransom collected in 1971 by airline hijacker D.B. Cooper.

Agents speculated earlier in the day that the muck and sand the money was buried in may have been dredge material. But they discounted that theory after a geologist examined the site, about 10 miles northwest of Vancouver.

"His (the geologist's) feeling is that the probabilities are that the material was washed ashore rather than (being in) dredged sand," FBI Agent Ralph Himmelsbach of Portland told The Post-Intelligencer last night.

Children on a family outing on Sunday found the first half-decomposed packets of $20 bills with which Cooper had parachuted from a Northwest Orient jetliner on Thanksgiving Eve, Nov. 24, 1971.

The total was between $1,000 and $4,000, Himmelsbach said, and serial numbers checked matched numbers on the marked bills given Cooper.

The money was found farther downriver from Vancouver than FBI agents had estimated Tuesday, when they announced the discovery, and it caused Himmelsbach to return to the theory he has had since 1971 that Cooper landed — dead or alive — in the vicinity of Lake Merwin on the Lewis River about 25 miles north of Vancouver.

Himmelsbach, the agent in charge of the investigation since the hijacking took place, said he believes the dozen packets of greenbacks were gradually washed down the Lewis River and into the Columbia River. Then, he said, ocean tides could have pushed them several miles up the Columbia to where they were found.

There was speculation Tuesday

that the site was too far up the Columbia for the money to have come from the Lewis River.

However, Himmelsbach said yesterday, "My understanding is that this is tidal water, and if so, there are times that this (river) runs backward. So it could have run upstream that far."

Did Cooper, lightly dressed and buffeted by wind and freezing rain when he parachuted from the airliner, drop the money on the way down?

"That's a good possibility," Himmelsbach said. "There's also the possibility that he just took the money, and neither he nor the money left there (where he landed)."

"I feel this is an indication that probably he didn't make it (alive), and it has been my feeling that probably he didn't make it because of the circumstances of the jump and the fact that he didn't have the proper equipment for parachuting," Himmelsbach continued.

"He didn't have a hardhat, goggles, leather gloves, jump suit or jump boots. He didn't have any of those things and he sure needed them all."

"I don't think the fall killed him," Himmelsbach theorized, "but there was that sudden stop. I think probably there was good likelihood he was injured during the fall and didn't have any help . . . and was unable to extricate himself (from wherever he fell). And probably is still there."

Agents continued digging yesterday, and Himmelsbach said he didn't know how long they would continue.

There was no trace at the site of the legendary extortionist nor of his parachute, and Himmelsbach indicated he didn't expect to find such evidence there.

The ransom money was given to Cooper at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport after he threatened to blow up the 727 trijet while on a flight from Portland. At Sea-Tac, he allowed all the passengers and all but four members of the crew to leave, demanded and received the $200,000 and four parachutes, and had the plane depart for Reno, Nev.

The skyjacker bailed out over Southwest Washington.

Sunday's find was particularly satisfying for Himmelsbach, who on Feb. 29 is scheduled to retire from the FBI after a career of nearly 29 years — more than eight of which were spent trying to solve the Cooper caper. The discovery of the money was the first solid break in the case.

"It doesn't increase my (retirement) annuity any, but it does make me happy," Himmelsbach said.

More Of D.B.'s Ransom Found

By Neil Modie

FBI agents yesterday found bits of more $20 bills buried in the sand beside the Columbia River near Vancouver, Wash., and said it was more of the $200,000 ransom collected in 1971 by airline hijacker D.B. Cooper.

Agents speculated earlier in the day that the muck and sand the money was buried in may have been dredge material. But they discounted that theory after a geologist examined the site, about 10 miles northwest of Vancouver.

"His (the geologist's) feeling is that the probabilities are that the material was washed ashore rather than (being in) dredged sand," FBI Agent Ralph Himmelsbach of Portland told The Post-Intelligencer last night.

Children on a family outing on Sunday found the first half-decomposed packets of $20 bills with which Cooper had parachuted from a Northwest Orient jetliner on Thanksgiving Eve, Nov. 24, 1971.

The total was between $1,000 and $4,000, Himmelsbach said, and serial numbers checked matched numbers on the marked bills given Cooper.

The money was found farther downriver from Vancouver than FBI agents had estimated Tuesday, when they announced the discovery, and it caused Himmelsbach to return to the theory he has had since 1971 that Cooper landed — dead or alive — in the vicinity of Lake Merwin on the Lewis River about 25 miles north of Vancouver.

Himmelsbach, the agent in charge of the investigation since the hijacking took place, said he believes the dozen packets of greenbacks were gradually washed down the Lewis River and into the Columbia River. Then, he said, ocean tides could have pushed them several miles up the Columbia to where they were found.

There was speculation Tuesday

that the site was too far up the Columbia for the money to have come from the Lewis River.

However, Himmelsbach said yesterday, "My understanding is that this is tidal water, and if so, there are times that this (river) runs backward. So it could have run upstream that far."

Did Cooper, lightly dressed and buffeted by wind and freezing rain when he parachuted from the airliner, drop the money on the way down?

"That's a good possibility," Himmelsbach said. "There's also the possibility that he just took the money, and neither he nor the money left there (where he landed)."

"I feel this is an indication that probably he didn't make it (alive), and it has been my feeling that probably he didn't make it because of the circumstances of the jump and the fact that he didn't have the proper equipment for parachuting," Himmelsbach continued.

"He didn't have a hardhat, goggles, leather gloves, jump suit or jump boots. He didn't have any of those things and he sure needed them all."

"I don't think the fall killed him," Himmelsbach theorized, "but there was that sudden stop. I think probably there was good likelihood he was injured during the fall and didn't have any help . . . and was unable to extricate himself (from wherever he fell). And probably is still there."

Agents continued digging yesterday, and Himmelsbach said he didn't know how long they would continue.

There was no trace at the site of the legendary extortionist nor of his parachute, and Himmelsbach indicated he didn't expect to find such evidence there.

The ransom money was given to Cooper at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport after he threatened to blow up the 727 trijet while on a flight from Portland. At Sea-Tac, he allowed all the passengers and all but four members of the crew to leave, demanded and received the $200,000 and four parachutes, and had the plane depart for Reno, Nev.

My Search for D.B. Cooper

9 Years Trailing The Phantom Skyjacker

Tuesday's announcement of the finding of part of the D.B. Cooper loot was the first dramatic development in one of the nation's most publicized — and puzzling — skyjack cases. Seattle writer Darrell Bob Houston, who has devoted years of study to the case and who wrote the book "King of the Midnight Blue," herewith reviews the D.B. Cooper history and his own preoccupation with it.

By Darrell Bob Houston

My first mistake was having the same initials as D.B. Cooper.

My second was writing a book about him.

My third was allowing myself to become a D.B. Cooper expert.

My fourth — and perhaps most dangerous — was when I scoffed at the supernatural overtones in the case.

My fifth mistake was the most embarrassing. After nine years of checking out everything from the Raleigh filter cigarettes that D.B. smoked to the thin clip-on necktie he wore, I came to see him as a kind of avatar. The Last Invisible Hero. He could be anybody — because he was nobody. Punk or paragon, he could go either way.

Even the FBI doesn't know what he looked like. The thousands of flyers they plastered around the world show Cooper's face hidden behind the fattest pair of sunglasses this side of Hollywood Boulevard.

D.B. is the only man ever to make the global Ten Most Wanted List — in disguise. But ask any school kid who the first man to walk on the moon was, and all you get is a stare. Mention D.B. and the kid will give you everything but the serial numbers on the ransom money.

There I go, parroting the lines that I've fed to people for the past nine years. Especially people who wanted my help in turning "the real D.B. Cooper" over to the police. Many claimed to have been in jail with him. One caller, after reading one of my essays on Cooper, said D.B. was really his mother — in drag.

Steadily it was building up, this feeling that I was hiding the truth from myself. I fought it back. Every time a new clue would turn up — a pair of soiled underwear in a Southwest Washington tree, the alleged sighting of a sasquatch playing building-blocks with a pile of $20 bills — I would write another skyjack article.

D.B. had become, in a sense, my life. And my livelihood.

Then came the day when the conviction struck home.

I had just finished a story for Saga Magazine called "The Phantom Skyjacker." I brushed off my dark Montgomery Ward business suit. I flicked at a mote of dust on my low-cut military brogans. I straightened my thin, clip-on tie. I pushed my wrap-around sunglasses up on my forehead and exclaimed to the skies.

"It's true. I know too much. I am D.B. Cooper!"

My megalomania fled the next day.

It was the letter that did it. From the opening paragraph, I was hooked.

Here's how it began:

Thanksgiving eve, 1971. A stormy night. A Northwest Orient 727 lumbers through the darkness. Its speed is barely above stall-point. A stairwell slowly descends from the big jet's belly.

A man appears. He rides the awaying ladder like a tomcat on a fire ladder. He wears a dark suit and overcoat. Sunglasses are taped to his temples.

Strapped to his waist is a canvas bag stuffed with the $200,000 ransom he collected at Seattle. Over his buttocks, on the same strap, an attache case dangles. It is black and contains five sticks of phony dynamite.

The man is poised on the final step. His laughter rises in the wind. He spreads his arms wide and skydives toward the treetops — and the folklore of the nation.

D.B. Cooper has arrived. The world will never be the same place again.

I felt a pang of professional jealousy. This guy was good with the typewriter. And all the space-age jargon was there. He called the 727-100's engines "Pratt & Whitney jewels." He knew the skyjacked plane's fuel capacity — in U.S. gallons. And he knew how much 10,000 twenties weighed.

It was smooth and authentic. Still, the writer could have gotten most of that stuff out of Jane's All the World's Aircraft.

But one section struck home. The part that told about the delivery of the ransom aboard the 727 at Sea-Tac Airport:

"The bills were the real McCoy. But all of them had been xeroxed to get their serial numbers. I know. I snarfed them personally."

Snarfed? A doozy of a verb, an active verb.

One that might lead me straight to the skyjacker. To an all-time journalistic scoop. To fame, fortune — and a Hollywood contract.

I read the letter a dozen times.

It was signed like the rest of them: D.B. Cooper. This one, however, was different. After more than 200 bogus D.B.'s write to you, you can tell.

The address was an apartment house on Capitol Hill. The place smelled of pomade and insecticide.

It was enough to make a health inspector call in sick. I knocked on Number 9.

"He ain't here. Not if you're looking for D.B."

The old man had tippy-toed up behind me in the carpeted hall.

way. He wore a Brahms sweatshirt and a pair of Vietcong pajama trousers. His slippers looked like the gloves on a boxing kangaroo.

"I kept my voice calm.

"Hello. Is he around?"

The old man clammed up.

"It's O.K., dad," I said. "I'm not with the police."

"Cooper packed up and moved out a couple of days ago," he said.

"Didn't pay his rent, though.

"His name is really D.B. Cooper?"

The old man studied his palms.

"Strange fella," he said. "Kept trying to turn himself in. But the cops wouldn't believe his story, either."

I called Sea-Tac and asked for Operations.

A young, eager voice came on.

I told its owner that I was a writer. What I specifically wanted to know was this: had anyone in Operations overheard any of the conversation between Cooper and the tower while the plane was refueling and the money was being delivered to the skyjacker?

There was a pause.

"I heard a little," the young man said. "But don't quote me."

"I don't even know your name," I assured him.

"The radio was a little staticky," he said. "I heard the captain tell Cooper that the smart skyjacker would try for San Francisco instead of Reno. Cooper just told him to rotate for takeoff — that's right, rotate — and head south, on Vector 23."

I asked what his voice was like.

"Flat, sir," my informant said.

"Kind of a whine, like W.C. Fields or Mae West."

"Anything else?"

"Yeh. Cooper was very unhappy about the money having been xeroxed. He said something like, 'I sniffed it myself — tell that to the bank.'"

"Sniffed?" I said. "Or snarfed?"

A long silence.

"I'm not sure, sir," the helpful young man said at last. His tone turned waspish. "Could it possibly make any difference?"

"Only," I said, "to someone who's over forty and has a dirty mind."

"Dirty mind, sir?"

Sighing, I thanked the young man and hung up. I was too old to be tracking phantom skyjackers.

Admit it, I goaded myself. You've finally OD'd on D.B.

But my addiction was not that simple.

Once a Cooper expert, always a Cooper expert.

(Next: The Los Angeles Times backs down on D.B. — and a beautiful blonde ghost visits my apartment.)

Finally, a fact is added to Cooper saga

by Steve Johnston
Times staff reporter

Passengers on Flight 305 remembered the man as a quiet-spoken sort wearing a dark brown suit. He took the last seat on the right-hand side of the Northwest Orient Airline's flight out of Portland heading for Seattle.

The only thing unusual about the man was that he wore sun glasses, unusual because it was a rainy day on November 24, 1971, a day before Thanksgiving.

The man checked aboard the Boeing 727 under the name of "Dan Cooper" in Portland, the last leg of the flight that had started in Washington, D.C.

By the time the plane finally set down in Reno several hours later, the man who became known as "D.B. Cooper" was gone, along with $200,000 in $20 bills, two parachutes and a briefcase which Cooper told the stewardess contained a bomb.

Somewhere in Southwest Washington, D.B. Cooper had bailed out at 10,000 feet into dark storm clouds and into history. He would remain to this day the only hijacker in the United States ever to escape arrest.

Over the last seven years, the F.B.I. has questioned more than 1,000 possible suspects, chased down thousands of leads and heard from hundreds of people who claim either to be Cooper or to know his whereabouts.

But it took an 8-year-old Vancouver, Wash., boy to uncover the only piece of concrete evidence that Cooper really did bail out into the dense forest of Southwest Washington.

Until Brian Ingram dug up 12 packets of $20 bills while on a picnic with his family along the Columbia River, law-enforcement officers only assumed D.B. Cooper jumped over Southwest Washington. The plane's recorder showed a "low pressure bump" at 8:11 p.m. near Woodland, and when the plane landed in Reno, the hijacker couldn't be found.

Hundreds of searchers spread out over the area around Woodland, hoping either to find the body or the money or just a piece of the parachute dangling from a tree. Most parachute experts consulted at the time agreed it would be almost impossible for Cooper to survive the plunge.

But within days of the hijacking, the legend of D.B. Cooper started to build. People started to talk about him as a modern-day Robin Hood. They admired the daring, the planning and the execution of the jump.

Slowly but surely, the reports of encounters with Cooper started to come out. A man in Woodland said someone knocked at his back door on November 24 about the time Cooper would have landed, but he didn't answer. Other people started turning in friends who looked like Cooper, in hopes of collecting the $25,000 reward.

Then the stories started to appear. The now defunct Seattle Flag ran several pages of purported interview with Cooper, and two Kitsap County men were arrested for selling a fake interview with Cooper to a former contributing editor of Newsweek for $30,000.

Five months ago, two Tacoma men said they had talked with D.B. Cooper, who, they said, was living in Puyallup. The man told them that the money was buried under a pile of garbage at the Puyallup dump.

Mostly, however, people just have had fun with the D.B. Cooper story. T-shirts with the picture of D.B. Cooper in his sunglasses and bearing the legend, "D.B. Cooper, Where Are You?" became popular, and there even was a song written about him.

The residents of Ariel, Cowlitz County, near where Cooper supposedly bailed out, started holding an annual "D.B. Cooper Day" to commemorate the event. The festival, called the "Cooper Caper," featured buffalo stew and sky divers and attracted more than 800 people. But not, apparently, D.B. Cooper.

As for the two Federal Bureau of Investigation agents who have been on the case since it began, they say they believe D.B. Cooper probably died the night he went out the plane.

"It is my personal opinion that he is dead," said Joseph O'Connell, who has retired. "He jumped out of a plane at 10,000 feet on a cold, raw night and he jumped in an area densely populated with Douglas fir and ponderosa pine."

Ralph Himmelsbach, Portland F.B.I. agent who is to retire February 29, said he was "delighted" about the money being found. He said the find reduced the chances of Cooper ever being found alive to "less than 50-50."

Phones 'ringing off the hook' at Ariel

by Richard Zahler
Times staff reporter

ARIEL, Cowlitz County — Not much happens in Ariel, a small logging community 11 miles east of Woodland.

Until a hijacker vanished mysteriously over Southwest Washington more than eight years ago, probably nothing happened in Ariel.

But D.B. Cooper put the town on the map, and yesterday and last night the telephones at the Ariel Store & Tavern were "ringing off the hook" said Dave Fisher, the owner.

Ariel happens to be near Lake Merwin, and a number of theorists suggested that Cooper might have gone into the reservoir behind the Ariel dam.

Since 1976 the Ariel Tavern has hosted an annual D.B. Cooper party on November 24, the anniversary of the hijacking in 1971. Every year 200 to 300 people have shown up to eat buffalo stew and see whether Cooper would answer the standing invitation to join the party.

He never has, of course.

Fisher bought the tavern and the tradition 15 months ago, and until 3:30 yesterday afternoon, "I wasn't expecting a thing tonight. It's pretty dead in winter."

But then the Federal Bureau of Investigation announced in Seattle and Portland that part of $200,000 given to the hijacker had been found along the banks of the Columbia River near Vancouver.

The moldering money, about $4,000, was found by a family picnicking along the river north of Portland. A young boy digging in the sandy riverbanks with a stick uncovered the loot.

After that, Fisher said, "It was just like the D.B. Cooper party."

Fisher said he had been on the run answering telephone calls from television-network reporters in New York and newspapers and radio stations all over the West Coast.

Only about 20 or 30 patrons were in the Ariel Tavern last night, and most were paying as much attention to playing pool as to the Cooper talk. A weekly Tuesday-night pool match with the Riverside Tavern in Woodland had been moved to Ariel last night at the request of a Portland television station interested in filming reaction to the discovery of the money.

Fisher and others said they were mystified as to how the money arrived on the banks of the Columbia River, but they still would have to be persuaded that the hijacker didn't survive after he bailed out of the Boeing 727.

"I still think he's alive, until they find some bones," Fisher said.

He said the finding could lead to other developments, pointing out that the discovery by the boy was a strange first trace of Cooper after so many years.

Then the telephone rang in the next room, Fisher raced to answer it, laughed and announced, "San Jose calling."

More D.B. Cooper cash sought

and Steve Johnston
Times staff reporters

VANCOUVER, Wash. — The Federal Bureau of Investigation brought a backhoe and experts in soil, archeology and river currents to a sandy Columbia River beach west of here today to seek more clues into the 8-year-old D.B. Cooper hijacking mystery.

An 8-year-old boy Sunday uncovered on the beach a small part of the $200,000 the legendary hijacker had strapped to his body when he parachuted from a Northwest Orient Airlines 727 over Southwestern Washington November 24, 1971.

F.B.I. agents yesterday found more fragments of $20 bills while digging at the beach. Paul Hudson, the F.B.I.'s on-site coordinator, said the fragments — the size of nickels and quarters — were found as much as 5 feet away from where the money was found Sunday. Some fragments were 3 feet under the surface.

Hudson said the bureau is trying to determine possible ways the money reached the beach. The river recently covered the beach, he said.

Hudson also noted that the Columbia River channel is dredged periodically and sand from the river bottom is pumped on the shore.

"It's possible that it washed up here a period of time ago . . . not 9 years ago but not necessarily recently," Hudson said.

Brian Ingram
Got scoop on skyjacker

Discovery of the money "probably raises as many questions as it does answers," Hudson said. "In my own mind I can rule out the possibility that (the money) was buried here."

Hudson said whether searchers might find Cooper's remains in the area is "one of the questions we hope to answer today."

The beach is about nine miles west of Vancouver, adjacent to a dairy farm and a popular spot for steelhead fishing. Today a Clark County deputy sheriff was at the farm gate, turning away fishermen and the curious.

One longtime fisherman, Sidney Tipper, 80, of Vancouver, was admitted to fish. Tipper said, "I've been going up and down this river for 10 years. The money wasn't very deep. If it had been here (a long time) I think we'd have seen it."

The F.B.I. said yesterday it presumes the money had been washed downstream, possibly from a tributary to the Columbia. An Army Engineers hydrologist said that the Washougal River was the only tributary that might have carried the money. The Washougal is the first Washington tributary upstream from Vancouver.

William M. Baker, assistant special agent for the Portland F.B.I. office, said he expected searches would be carried out along the Columbia to the mouth of the Washougal and possibly up the Washougal.

The money recovered Sunday, in three bundles of decomposing $20 bills, was discovered by Brian Ingram, 8, of Vancouver. The boy was on a family picnic, helping build a fire, when he discovered the money. He and his cousin, Denise Ingram, 5, dug it from the sand, about 3 inches down.

"I thought, 'Wow!'" Brian said. "I saw it was money and went over to my parents. They thought it was counterfeit."

The boy's father, Harold D. Ingram, said he called the F.B.I. because "I figured if anybody knew what to do it would be them." He said he did not connect the money with the D.B. Cooper loot.

The money was described as looking like a ball of wet pulp. Agents said there could be anywhere from $4,000 to $10,000 in the bundle.

The serial numbers of the bills matched the numbers of the $200,000 taken by Cooper when he hijacked the plane, which was on a Portland-Seattle flight. The money was put aboard at the Seattle-Tacoma Airport. Cooper jumped out through the 727's rear loading steps somewhere in Southwestern Washington after ordering the pilot to fly to Reno.

Dorwyn Schreuder, an F.B.I. agent in charge of the beach search yesterday, said Cooper probably is not alive today. "If he were, I think he'd be with his money," Schreuder said.

One earlier F.B.I. theory was that Cooper fell to his death in Lake Merwyn on the Lewis River. However, the Lewis River enters the Columbia downstream from where the money was found.

Baker said he believes rewards offered in the D.B. Cooper case have expired. "But if there was a reward," Baker said, "I certainly would recommend that the Ingrams get it."

The discovery was the first major break for the F.B.I. in the hijacking. The hijacking was the first of its kind and the only one that remains to be solved.

FBI: Cooper likely dead man

By KERRY WEBSTER
TNT Staff Writer

It's more likely than ever that the legendary D. B. Cooper is just a grinning skeleton in a nylon shroud, say FBI agents raking the sand for the last of his mouldering stash.

"The discovery of the money adds credence to the theory that he probably did not survive the jump," said Bill Williams, a special agent in Portland.

On the north bank of the Columbia River today, more than 30 FBI agents worked behind a cordon of armed sheriff's deputies, spading over every square foot of sand along 150 feet of shoreline.

The site is where eight-year-old Brian Ingram of Vancouver, digging idly in the sand with a stick on Sunday, turned up a sodden wad of $20 bills.

Serial numbers on the money — 12 stacks of twenties, still in their bank wrappings — matched some of those given to "Dan Cooper" when he hijacked Northwest Airlines Flight 305 on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971.

Flourishing what looked like a stick of dynamite, "Cooper" ordered the plane to fly from Seattle-Tacoma International Airport to Reno, Nev., after first demanding $200,000 and four parachutes.

The Boeing 727's flight recorder indicated that he jumped from the plane's lowered rear stairwell somewhere near Ariel, a tiny logging town in Southwest Washington.

No trace of Cooper or the hijacking loot had shown up in the past nine years. The mysterious air pirate in that time has become a cult figure, with sweatshirts, bumperstickers and endless pulp-magazine stories dedicated to the exploit.

FBI agents, who have been the butt of D. B. Cooper jokes for nine years, did not conceal a certain grim satisfaction when they announced the finding of the money in Seattle and Portland press conferences yesterday.

The fact that the money appears to have washed up on the riverbank, rather than having been purposely buried there, increases the chances that Cooper is dead.

"There is no way we can tell if he is dead or alive," said John Pringle, assistant agent in charge of the Seattle office. "We only know that if he is alive, he doesn't have this money."

The site of the find is about nine miles downriver from the Interstate 5 bridge over the Columbia between Portland and Vancouver. Young Ingram made the discovery while picnicking with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dwayne Ingram.

The elder Ingram told reporters yesterday he was preparing to build a fire when his son "ran up and said, 'Wait a minute, Daddy.' He raked a place out in the sand, and there it was."

Ingram told The Associated Press he didn't even consider spending the money, because it looked so badly deteriorated.

The decomposed money was being sent today to the FBI crime lab in Washington, D.C., for examination. Pringle said there is a possibility that mud and soil deposited in the bundles may give a clue as to where they were washed from.

"We're going to be doing some study of tide tables and flood records, also," added Portland agent Williams today. "That'll tell us whether examining any of the Columbia's tributaries would be useful."

The Washougal River flows into the Columbia below the money site, and its origins are deep in the woods over which Cooper is believed to have jumped.

However, Williams noted, the Columbia is frequently dredged and often floods where the money was found, so the situation could be very confused.

Pringle said Cooper jumped with the money tied around his waist, and he said he believed "it was in a bag which would have deteriorated over this length of time."

He said a major objective of the search going on now is to find some other object that is connected to Cooper.

"We could find bones, or a piece of parachute," he said. "Nylon does not deteriorate rapidly."

Agents using spades and rakes have discovered a few more pieces of $20 bills, about the size of nickels and dimes, according to the FBI. The new discoveries were made within a three-foot radius of the original finding.

"We are planning to bring in some heavy equipment tomorrow to speed things up," Williams said. "The problem when you dig up a spadeful of sand is, what do you do with the sand?"

In Ariel, meanwhile, tavern owner Dave Fisher said the little town will go on with plans for its annual "D. B. Cooper party" at his Ariel Store & Tavern this Nov. 24.

"You know, if they had found the body," he said, "we were planning some sort of a memorial party."

D.B.'s loot found

Part of the money paid to D. B. Cooper, the legendary skyjacker, was shown during an FBI news conference yesterday. FBI officials said several thousand dollars of the $200,000 ransom Cooper received in 1971 had been found on a Columbia River sandbar five miles north of Vancouver, Wash. A picnicking family found the soaked cache while looking for firewood. Cooper, who parachuted from a 727 airliner, has never been found.

Pickings are slim in Cooper treasure hunt

and Steve Johnston
Times staff reporters

Federal Bureau of Investigation treasure hunters returned to a cold and sandy Columbia River beach downstream from Vancouver, Wash., today seeking more clues to the eight-year-old D.B. Cooper skyjacking mystery.

The F.B.I. mixed a little science and technology with a lot of old-fashioned elbow grease yesterday in continued digging at the beach. Agents continued to find scraps of $20 bills in the area where a picnicking Vancouver family found three bundles of money Sunday.

Through serial numbers, those decomposed bundles of bills have been identified as "several thousand dollars" of the $200,000 given to the man who hijacked a Northwest Orient Airlines 727 in November, 1971, then parachuted from the jet with his loot. The F.B.I. believes he jumped somewhere in the vicinity of LaCenter, about 25 miles northeast of the beach where the money was found.

Yesterday's search, aided by a backhoe and advice from a Portland State University geologist, provided no clues how the money got to the beach or where it has been since the hijacking.

F.B.I. agents said the money still was packaged in the same order as it was given to the hijacker. The geologist said the money probably had been there for less than two years.

Kenneth Moore, a Seattle F.B.I. agent assigned to the case, said, "One reason for conducting an exhaustive search of this area would be to find other indications of what happened — pieces of clothing, pieces of bag, pieces of parachute or human remains, which in this case would be only bones."

The beach area is 7½ miles northwest of Vancouver on a stretch of shoreline used heavily by fishermen and lined with industrial plants and farms.

Moore and other agents said it would be just speculation to suggest that Cooper might have come down near the Columbia River beach, or that the search site might give any clue besides additional pieces of money. The round shape of the wads of money suggested that the cash could have tumbled along the river bed, agents said.

The farmers who own the shoreland, Al and Richard Fazio, said the place where the money was found is periodically underwater during high river runoff, like last week.

Moore said the currency might have been pumped on the beach during the dredging, but that was doubted by Dr. Leonard Palmer, Portland State geologist.

Palmer said the scraps of money had been found in coarser sand, not in dredging spoils. The river last was dredged there in 1974.

Moore said the meager evidence suggests the hijacker "may have landed in the water, although not necessarily the Columbia."

Speculation that Cooper could have dropped into Lake Merwin, a reservoir on the Lewis River, was replaced this week by speculation he could have landed in the Washougal River watershed. The Lewis River enters downstream from the search area, the Washougal upstream from Vancouver.

But Moore said there were no plans to search upriver "unless evidence leads us to a more specific area."

Small pieces of currency were found yesterday in scattered places as they combed through sand several hundred feet downstream from Sunday's discovery site.

Other fragments showed up as agents shoveled sand through wire screens around the main site. The largest piece discovered yesterday was about the size of a stick of chewing gum. It was several layers thick.

Moore said the new fragments may once have been part of the destroyed bundles discovered Sunday.

Although there were several rewards offered for the discovery of the money or the arrest of D.B. Cooper, federal agents said it looked as if the Harold Ingram family is out of luck. Ingram's son, Brian, 8, uncovered the money.

"As far as I know, all reward offers have been canceled," a Portland F.B.I. agent, Bill Williams, said.

Roy Erickson, a spokesman for Northwest Orient in St. Louis, said the airline had settled with its insurance company, Globe of New York, several years ago and received $180,000.

"Our loss was covered by our insurance and so we are out of the situation now," he said.

Ralph Himmelsbach, a Portland F.B.I. agent who has worked on the D.B. Cooper case since 1971, said the finding of the money gave him "a certain sense of satisfaction," the Associated Press reported.

"The case isn't solved," Himmelsbach said, "but this is certainly a major milestone."

"So we know at least that he (Cooper) never spent this money, and we know that none of the money he was given has ever turned up in circulation."

Himmelsbach said Cooper's skeleton probably never will be found if it is in the forested mountain area where he is supposed to have landed.

"Unlike the money, Cooper is biodegradable," Himmelsbach said.

FBI Halts Search For Cooper Clues & Loot

FBI agents yesterday called off their search on a sandy beach of the Columbia River west of Vancouver for more evidence of D.B. Cooper and the $200,000 he carried when he parachuted from a skyjacked airliner in November 1971.

"When the agents get back here next week, we'll discuss what direction to take next," said Jack Pringle, an FBI agent in Seattle.

One partly decomposed bundle of marked $20 bills from the Cooper loot was found Sunday by a family picnicking beside the river nine miles below Vancouver.

It probably will be at least a week before the FBI laboratory in Washington, D.C., will report on how much money was found, said Bill Williams, of the FBI office in Portland, Ore., whose agents dug and sifted the sand earlier this week.

Cooper is believed to have parachuted over Lake Merwin in Cowlitz County. No trace of him or the money is known to have been found until the discovery Sunday.

Williams said yesterday that Leonard Palmer, a geologist at Portland State University, concluded that the money drifted onto the river bank sometime after August 1974. The money lay in sand on top of spoil from a dredging operation that was conducted that month, Palmer told the FBI.

Pringle said that sooner or later the recovered money will be returned to its owner.

"We don't know who that is and it's not up to us to determine," he said. "It might be that a court will have to decide."

The $200,000 was delivered to Cooper aboard a Northwest Airline plane in Seattle after he skyjacked it.

Brent Baskfield, a Northwest public relations officer in St. Paul, Minn., said Northwest paid the money but has been reimbursed for most of it by The Globe Insurance Co. in New York City.

How it all started

On Nov. 24, 1971, a calm, middle-age man calling himself Dan Cooper bought a ticket for a Northwest Airlines flight to Seattle.

Shortly after takeoff, he handed a note to stewardess Florence Schaffner.

Thinking the man was trying to "hustle" her, she stuffed the note in her purse, but he motioned for her to read it.

The note said he had a bomb, and wanted to go to Mexico.

While the jet circled Seattle before landing, the skyjacker also ordered that $200,000 cash and four parachutes be brought to the plane.

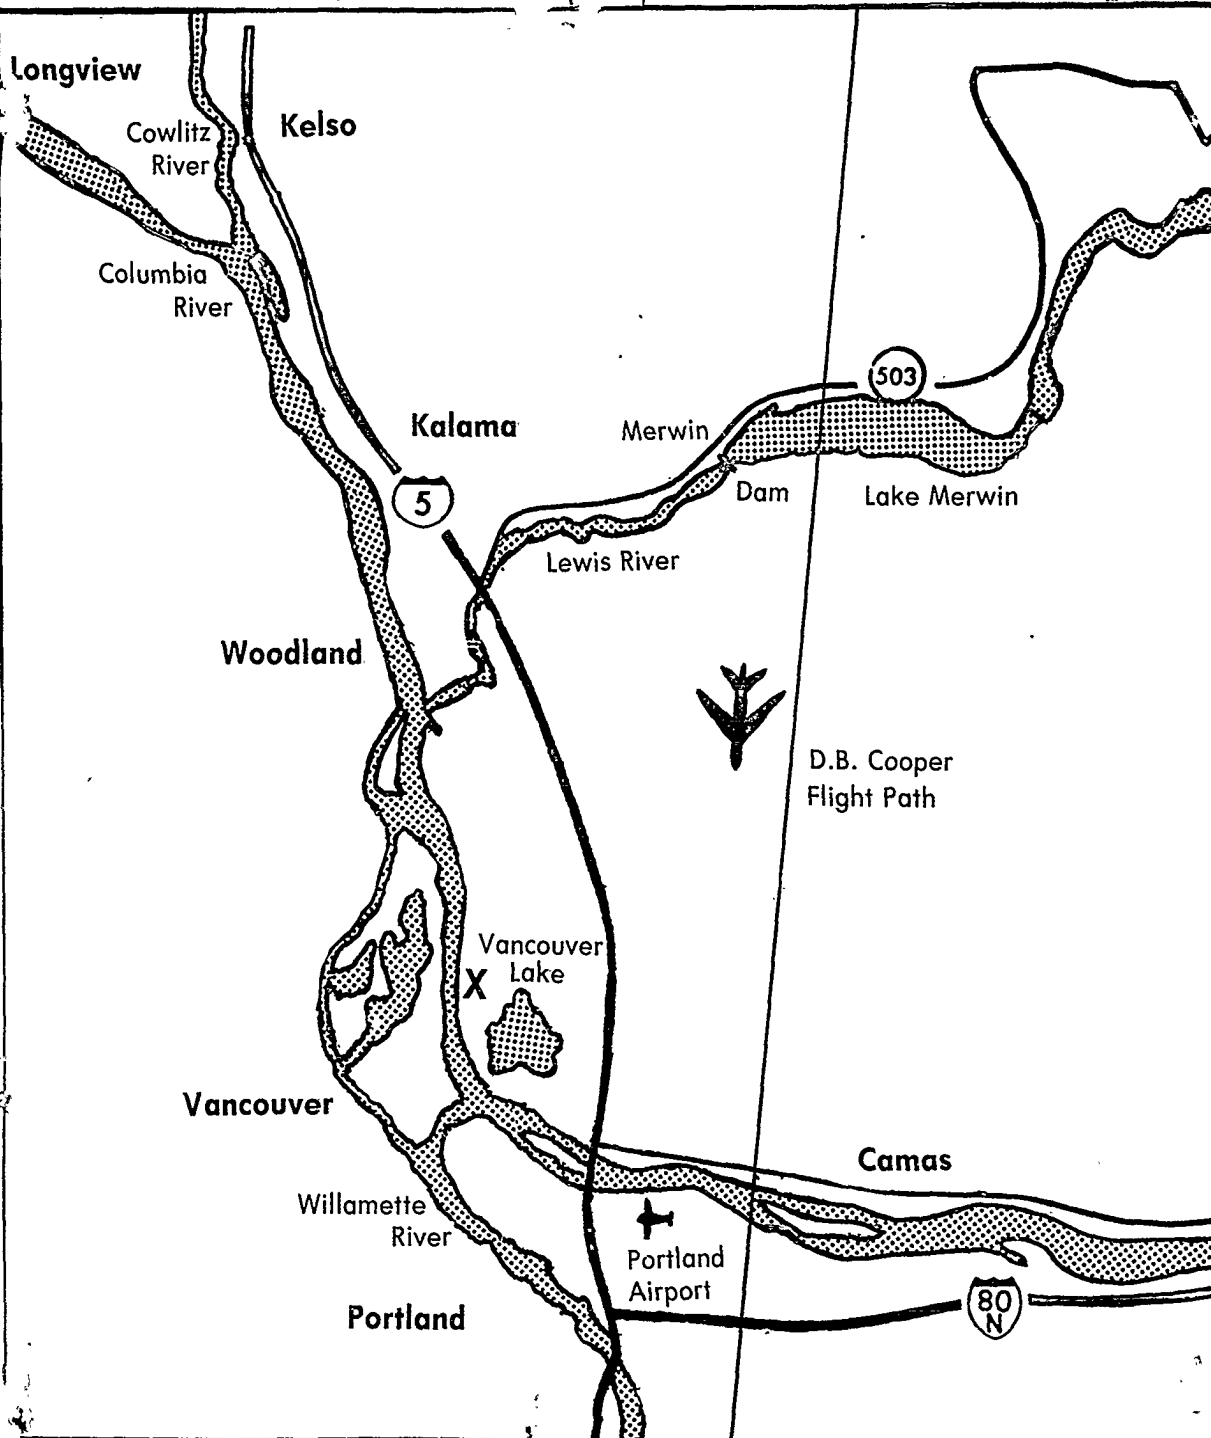

The airline agreed, 36 passengers and part of the crew were allowed to leave, and the plane took off with the man and his ransom.

As it flew south, the rear airstair was lowered, and minutes later the plane reacted in a manner that convinced the crew that the skyjacker had bailed out somewhere in the Lewis River-Lake Merwin area east of Woodland.

Thus began the legend of D.B. Cooper (the name Dan Cooper somehow got lost in news media accounts of the incident.)

Cooper has never been found, but interest in the case is still strong, and flared Tuesday when the FBI announced a Vancouver family had found several thousand dollars of the ransom money on a Columbia River beach northwest of Vancouver.

Several stories about the case appear in today's issue of The Daily News.

Beach residents groan

By Donna duBeth
The Daily News

The handful of residents who live along the beach where part of D.B. Cooper's loot was found Sunday are kicking themselves for not building more sand castles.

They also wonder whether they should have paid more attention to the sand dredging operations along the beach.

Tina Bar is a stretch of sandy beach on the Washington side of the Columbia River northwest of Vancouver. The lonely country road that winds along the beach, Lower River Road, dead-ends about three miles from where a Vancouver family found about $3,000 beneath the sand Sunday while on a picnic. Rabbits bounce on the side of the road at night, startled by occasional passing cars.

Less than 10 houses are along the 12-mile stretch of beach road. Most of the land belongs to large dairy farms. The Fazio Bros. Sand Co. also fronts the river. A road leading through the Fazio gate is a popular path to the beach. It is the same path used by the family the day they found the money. On the east side of Fazio Bros. is Leeward Isle Marina, with a public fishing boat launch and one or two house boats.

During fishing season, the beach is packed from end to end, say local residents Clarence and Barbara Ellis. They have lived in their mobile home just down the road from Fazio Bros. for the past 30 years.

Every day Clarence takes his outboard skiff along Tina Bar patrolling the river and the beach for renegade logs that could damage other boats.

Ellis says that the Army Corps of Engineers continuously dredges sand directly off the shore from where the money was found.

"I betcha that dredging brought that money up and most of it's been destroyed by the dredging," he said. "Even the FBI is going to be able to figure that one out."

Today a spokesman for the Army Engineers said they were working closely with the FBI, checking out that lead. The sand sucked up from the bottom of the river and spewed onto the beach could have contained some or all of the long-sought money. While the dredging is continuous, the last time sand was deposited in that spot was in October 1974.

Another resident of the area said that the money was found too far from the water to have washed up. "It had to be the dredging. Maybe I'll go get me a shovel," said Mrs. J.W. Freeman.

The FBI dug all day Tuesday, finding bits and pieces of $20 bills. An agent guarding the site Tuesday evening said the amount they found during the day was less than the $3,000 originally dug up.

Tuesday night the Ellis family sat in their home decorated with fishing gear and large plants, amazed that some the D.B. Cooper money was showing up on the same beach their children grew up on.

"To think I worked like a slave all my life and here this money was right in my front yard," said Ellis. "When I think of the times my kids took the four-wheel drive right over that spot. I mean that's our beach. It belongs to the people we lease from and that's the beach we use."

His wife, Barbara, said she felt "kinda sick" not finding it. But she added that she would have turned it in. "Somebody could have lost it," she said.

The beach property actually belongs to the Hans Egger family of Vancouver. A baby sitter at the home said the Eggers were on vacation in California. They learned the money had been found on their property when they listened to a television newscast Tuesday night.

"They were shocked," said the baby sitter.

The body of skyjacker D.B. Cooper lies on the bottom of Lake Merwin, most likely hung up on a snag.

Retired FBI Agent Tom Manning of Longview has held that theory for several years, and still does.

The fact that some of the ransom money Cooper got from Northwest Airlines was found Sunday on a Columbia River beach north and west of Vancouver has not changed his conviction in the least.

Manning, now manager of the Longview Chamber of Commerce, had charge of the massive searches conducted in the Lewis River area after the infamous skyjacking of a Northwest Airlines jet on Thanksgiving Eve in 1971.

Because he worked so long on a case that has never been solved, the former resident agent has taken a lot of ribbing from friends and acquaintances.

"Some still call me D.B. Cooper," he said with a chuckle Tuesday night.

Manning never believed the skyjacker survived the jump with $200,000 in ransom money, and was among the first to say so.

"I said several years ago that I think he may be hung up on a snag at the bottom of Lake Merwin, and I still think so," Manning said after learning Tuesday that some of the ransom money had been found.

Manning said the fact that the money was found upstream, rather than downstream from the mouth of the Lewis River, doesn't disprove his theory.

He said it could have been moved upstream by tides and currents.

George Holmes, a hydrologist for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, says that would not have been impossible, but he considers it unlikely that currents would have moved the cash that far upstream.

"However," Holmes, emphasized, "I'm not taking issue in any way with the theory of where the hijacker may have come down after leaving the plane, or where the rest of the money might be."

Manning recalls vividly the intensive search conducted east of Woodland in the Lewis River area.

He says Charles Farrell of Seattle was the FBI agent in charge of the case, while Manning coordinated the searches. Other agents from the Seattle and Portland FBI offices were also involved. In addition, about 200 soldiers from Fort Lewis were used in an inch by inch grid search conducted in March of 1972 after the winter snows melted.

Despite the fact that no trace of Cooper was found, Manning and other agents remained convinced he had jumped somewhere in the Lewis River-Lake Merwin area, where crewmen of the Boeing 727 noted a fluctuation in the cabin rate of pressure indicator about 8:10 p.m.

Minutes earlier lights came on in the cockpit indicating the rear airstair of the aircraft had been lowered.

"Using the same aircraft, we made some tests three days after the hijacking, and the results gave credence to the theory that he jumped in the area the crew told us about," Manning said.

Manning was aboard the plane, flown by the chief pilot of the airline, when it was taken over the Pacific Ocean off the Hoquiam bombing range for the tests. Also present was the same flight engineer who was on duty the night of the incident.

"We took along some wooden sleds with sandbags to approximate the weight of Cooper, the parachutes given him and the ransom money, and dropped them from the plane when the flying conditions were the same as they were at the time he bailed out," Manning recalled.

The airstair was lowered, and the sleds dropped.

"The engineer said the plane reacted the same as it had before when the weight was released," Manning said Tuesday.

According to Manning, the FBI and the airline were convinced then that the man calling himself D.B. Cooper bailed out of the jet in the Lewis River area, and nothing has happened to shake that belief.

Where he landed has never been determined, but Manning still thinks Lake Merwin is a good bet.

According to Manning, the FBI and the airline were convinced then that the man calling himself D.B. Cooper bailed out of the jet in the Lewis River area, and nothing has happened to shake that belief.

Where he landed has never been determined, but Manning still thinks Lake Merwin is a good bet.

Boy beats FBI to Cooper loot

FBI agents digging in search of more clues

By Bud May
The Daily News

PORTLAND — An 8-year-old boy accomplished with a sweep of his hand Sunday something the FBI has been trying to do for more than eight years.

Brian Ingram, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dwayne Ingram of Vancouver, provided the first major breakthrough in the D.B. Cooper skyjacking case when he accidentally uncovered part of the $200,000 ransom Cooper had when he bailed out of a Northwest Airlines jet in the Lewis River area on Thanksgiving Eve, Nov. 24, 1971.

The FBI said Tuesday the discovery of more than $3,000 in badly deteriorated $20 bills was made Sunday while the Ingram family was on an outing on a Columbia River beach about five miles northwest of Vancouver on the Washington side.

Meantime, the FBI is conducting an intensive grid search of the beach area where the money was found. Agents reported finding bits and pieces of money Tuesday afternoon, some of it as deep as three feet in sand.

However, the pieces were so small it was not possible to determine the amount of money.

A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers hydrologist, George Holmes, said he would review information about where the hijacker jumped in relation to where the money was found.

He said the Washougal River was the only Columbia tributary that might have carried the cash, and even that is a remote possibility.

Not everyone shares that opinion.

Some experts feel that because of the Columbia's currents, the money could have come from the Lewis River and washed upstream.

The FBI has also contacted the Army Engineers, which continuously dredges sand in that area, on the chance that dredging brought the money up from the bottom of the river. A spokesman for the Army Engineers said today that it is a definite possibility. While they constantly dredge in that area, the last time they deposited the dredged sand on that beach was in October 1974.

Agents said the money, in bundles, without question is part of that given the man known as Cooper.

"The packaging and numbered sequence indicate the bills have not been separated and are in much the same order as when given to the hijacker," explained Bill Baker, assistant agent in charge at the Portland office.

Baker could not say whether the Ingram family will get a reward, since the FBI can not offer one, but he indicated there is a good possibility that the airline or another source would provide one.

The elder Ingram and his wife, Patricia, told dozens of news media people at a press conference in the Portland FBI Office Tuesday how the money was found.

"I was about to build a fire on the beach," said Ingram, "and had my arms full, but before I could set it down, my son said, 'Wait a minute daddy.' He scooped off some sand, and this money rolled to the top."

A UPI reporter who talked with the family Tuesday said Brian and his 5-year-old cousin, Denise Ingram, shouted, "Look! It's money that we found!"

The Ingrams said they didn't connect the money to the Cooper case at the time, but realized it must be important to someone, so they notified the Portland FBI Office of the find.

Asked by a reporter why he contacted the FBI instead of local authorities, Ingram responded, "Because I figured if I turned it over to police, I would never see it again."

He didn't elaborate on that remark, but continued to answer questions from newspaper, television and radio reporters.

Asked if he considered keeping the money, Ingram laughingly replied, "No, it looked in such bad shape I didn't think I could spend it."

Ingram said the money, which was displayed for reporters on a table at the press conference, was about 20 yards from the edge of the river, but was very wet.

Because of the poor condition of the bills, the exact amount of recovered money is unknown pending laboratory examination, the FBI said.

While FBI agents seem ecstatic about the discovery, they are quick to point out that approximately $197,000 is still missing, and what happened to Cooper himself is just as much a mystery as before the find.

The Loot Reveals New Clues to the Fate of D.B.

By John O'Ryan

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Eight FBI agents digging on a Columbia River beach in a snowstorm found no more of D.B. Cooper's hijack ransom yesterday, but they revealed new clues to the fate of the legendary parachutist.

Special agent Ken Moore of Seattle, in charge of the digging, said a geologist's report indicates that the money which has been found drifted up on this beach within the past two years.

Furthermore, Moore said as he warmed himself by a campfire during a respite from the frigid digging, the money came downstream, and probably reached the Columbia from the Washougal River, or one of several smaller streams which enter the big river above here.

It isn't likely, he said, that the money came upstream, with tidal currents, from the Lewis River — which drains Lake Merwin, where Cooper has long been thought to have perished.

Moore thought for a few moments, then said:

"Tourists who want to look for more Cooper money probably should look on the Washougal River."

All of which indicates that Cooper, with $200,000 in a canvas suitcase strapped to his body, jumped from a Northwest Airlines Boeing 727 a little southeast of the point originally estimated by the FBI.

He apparently landed southeast of Lake Merwin which is just off I-5 near Woodland, in the drainage of the Washougal River, or nearby streams, in hilly, wooded country.

"There is nothing infallible about our original estimate of where he landed," said John Pringle, assistant special agent in charge of the Seattle office.

"Because of strong wind currents, and other variables, we could have been a little off in our original estimates."

According to Pringle, only one money bundle from the $200,000 hijack ransom was found on this beach nine miles downstream from the bridge over the Columbia River at Vancouver.

But since Cooper had all of his money in one canvas container, according to Moore, if any of the money is scattered — all of it is likely to be scattered.

Cooper, whose real identity has never been learned, literally dropped out of sight the night he plunged from the airliner. He had collected his hijack loot in Seattle — bundles of money wrapped in a package six inches high, one foot across, and about 18 inches long — later stuffed into a bag tied to his waist.

No trace was found of Cooper or his money until a family picnicking on this north bank of the Columbia, on property owned by the Fazio Brothers Sand Co. and dairy cow farm, found tattered bills three to six inches deep in the sand.

It was "Seattle day" at the FBI diggings on the Columbia River yesterday. The previous day, 10 FBI agents from the Portland bureau carried out the digging.

Yesterday, eight agents from the Seattle bureau were hard at work. The beach is roped off, and a Clark County sheriff's car was parked at the entrance to the Fazio property to keep the public out.

Sand was piled around the original money discovery area, because the FBI had been using a backhoe to excavate there. Agents were working yesterday with shovels and rakes.

Moore said a Portland State University Geologist is the one who determined that the money had floated onto the beach within the last two years.

This, Moore said, was based on a determination that there is only about six to eight inches of sand on this beach, and beneath it is a clay that was placed here by a channel dredging project carried out in 1974.

The clay, he said, appears "undisturbed," but the sand contains soft-drink containers and other debris from picnickers. It appears to be of recent origin, and the money was found only about three to six inches deep in it.

Moore said the Army Corps of Engineers had scuttled the theory that the money had drifted upstream with tidal currents from the mouth of the Lewis River, which enters the Columbia downstream from here.

"I talked to the engineers, and they said that it is most unlikely that anything drifted upstream against the current," Moore said.

If no more money is found, the FBI's digging on the beach will end today, Moore said.

But he expressed the belief that the departure of the FBI will not end the sifting through this strip of sand.

"After we leave, probably 2,500 people will digging here the next day," he said.

Most agents believe he died in the jump, and their views are strengthened by the fact that the bills found Sunday were unseparated. In addition, none of the ransom money has ever turned up elsewhere in the more than eight years since the skyjacking.

Ralph Himmelsbach, an agent associated with the case from the beginning, is among those who believe the skyjacker died, and may never be found.

"I originally thought he had a 50-50 chance of survival. I later modified my own opinion, and believe he had substantially less chance than that.

Himmelsbach, who retires at the end of this month, is also a pilot. He flew over the suspected bailout area the day after the incident, and later was assigned to follow up leads received by the Portland office.

He said he is delighted by the discovery of the money, and hopes more evidence will be found.

While his retirement means an end to his involvement in the investigation, Himmelsbach said he will always maintain a keen interest in the case.

"We've put an awful lot of work into it," he said.

FBI ending hunt for Cooper cash

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — The search along a Columbia River beach for more money from the D.B. Cooper hijacking eight years ago probably will be suspended after today, FBI officials said Thursday.

Meanwhile, a geologist concluded that several thousand dollars found Sunday by an 8-year-old boy on a family picnic was deposited on the beach in the past year or two.

FBI agents continued to dig for more of the $200,000 that Cooper took with him when he bailed out of a plane on Thanksgiving Eve in 1971.

The search began Tuesday along the river's north shore, about three miles southwest of downtown Vancouver. Additional scraps of money were found on Wednesday.

A man whose passenger list was signed "Dan Cooper" left a Northwest Airlines plane that was bound for Reno, Nev., from Seattle after he displayed what appeared to be a bomb and obtained a package of $20 bills and three parachutes.

FBI agents believed he left the plane, during a storm, about 20 miles northeast of where the crumbled and weathered bills were found.

It is the nation's only unsolved hijacking.

"We'll work today and tomorrow and probably knock it off and bring my troops back up here and reassess the situation," said Jack Pringle, assistant agent in charge of the Seattle office which took over the search operations.

"Some of the area is inaccessible and there's no way we can search the whole river," Pringle said.

He said geologist Leonard Palmer of Portland State University concluded that the dredging operation in 1974 did not put the money onto the beach, because the bills were found above clay deposits put on the banks by the dredge.

Brian Ingram, when scooping out a place for a campfire, found the money, tied together by rubber bands in three clumps, under a thin layer of sand.

The bills were matched to the Cooper loot by serial numbers.

Re: D. B. Cooper

Dear Mr. Baker:

We have become aware that some of the money given to D. B. Cooper has been recovered. This letter is to advise you that our client, Globe Indemnity Company, reimbursed Northwest Airlines for the money which was given to D. B. Cooper. It is our opinion, based on the terms of the contract pursuant to which such indemnification was made, that Globe Indemnity is entitled to receive any recovery made until the full amount of indemnification has been repaid.

We would appreciate being kept advised of what recovery is or has been made.

Very truly yours,

Dan Cooper bill not given to boy

Brian Ingram, the 8-year-old Vancouver, Wash., boy who discovered some of the Dan Cooper skyjacking ransom last week, was not given one of the deteriorated bills, as was reported Tuesday in some editions of The Oregonian.

The boy actually was given a $20 bill made to look like one of the tattered bills, in addition to a certificate praising him for his find. Both items came from the Hough Elementary School PTA.

Meanwhile in Washington, D.C., FBI laboratory technicians have been unable to determine how much money was in the three bundles of Cooper's recovered as a result of young Ingram's find.

"The $20 bills were so badly deteriorated that we have been unable to count it," said FBI spokesman Otis Cox. He said no fingerprints were found on the bills.

The bills were identified as part of Cooper's $200,000 by their serial numbers.

"Several thousand dollars" of the $200,000 obtained eight years ago by the celebrated airline hijacker who used the name Dan Cooper was found Sunday along the Columbia River downstream from Vancouver, Wash., the FBI reported Tuesday.

Three bundles containing 12 packets of weatherbeaten $20 bills were found in river sand by a picnicking Vancouver family, about nine miles northwest of the city.

FBI agents searching the beach Tuesday afternoon found several more fragments of $20 bills, some of them under three feet of sand.

Harold Dwayne Ingram, his wife, Patricia, and their son, Brian, 8, were preparing to build a fire on the beach when Brian brushed the sand aside and turned up some of the bills, Ingram said.

"We dug around and found three bundles of bills tied with rubber bands," Ingram said.

The bills were wet and badly worn, but the serial numbers were legible. The FBI identified the serial numbers and confirmed that they were part of the loot given Cooper when he hijacked a Northwest Orient Airlines Boeing 727 jetliner between Portland and Seattle on Nov. 24, 1971.

William M. Baker, assistant special agent in charge of the Portland FBI office, said the Ingrams were relatively new to the Vancouver area, moving there recently from Oklahoma. They had never heard of Cooper, Baker said.

"They took it (the money) home and were talking to some friends about it," Baker said. "The friends pointed out that it might be the money from the Cooper thing. That's when they called the FBI."

Ralph Himmelsbach, the FBI agent in charge of the case since the hijacking, said it was the first solid clue to the Cooper mystery since the hijacker bailed out near La Center, Wash., into a winter storm at 8:10 p.m. that Thanksgiving Eve. The first hijacking for money, the Cooper case became a national sensation.

Baker said it was possible the FBI laboratory in Washington, D.C., could discern fingerprints on the money.

"That would be a hell of a break," he said.

Baker said the money the Ingrams found had not been counted. At first the amount recovered was estimated at about $4,000, but "we have revised our estimate to several thousand dollars," he said.

Baker said the money was bundled into packages of several sizes at the time of the hijacking, "to make it appear that it was randomly done, as if it was done in a hurry." Because of that, the actual amount could not be estimated, he said.

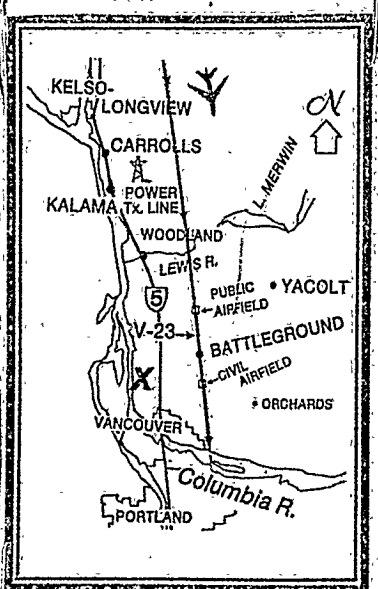

FBI agents Tuesday were carefully combing the site of the Sunday discovery for further clues. The beach, open to the public, is owned by the New Columbia Gardens Co., a truck and dairy farm.

Cooper was seen on the plane tying a nylon cord around his waist, presumably to tie the money into a parachute bag. The Ingrams said they did not see any sign of a cloth bag, but Himmelsbach said it would be hard to understand how the bundles of bills could have stayed together all these years if they were not in some kind of container.

Baker said the search for Cooper's remains or other clues would be resumed in a new area.

FBI spokesmen concluded that the bills could have been washed down some tributary of the Columbia.

George Holmes, a U.S. Army Corps of Engineers hydrologist, said he would review information about where Cooper er was believed to have jumped and where the money was found. He said the Washougal River was the only Columbia tributary that might have carried the cash. Even that, he said, "is a remote possibility. But I can't say until I see more information."

FBI agents sifting the sand at the picnic site Tuesday had found a few more $20 bills, but no evidence of a container. The bundles of bills were badly worn, as if eaten away by contact with rocks and gravel while drifting downstream.

"The packaging and the numbered sequence of the bundles indicated that they had not been separated, and were in much the same order as when delivered to Cooper at Seattle-Tacoma Airport the night of the hijacking," Baker said. He said they would be sent to the FBI laboratory immediately for further examination.

Ingram, 28, and his wife, 26, will get no reward so far as is known, FBI agents said. Northwest Airlines' reward offer has expired.

"If there is one, they deserve it," Baker said. Ingram works as a painter in the U-Cart factory in Vancouver.

Brian Ingram, who is in the second grade at Hough School in Vancouver, does not yet know that he is a hero, his mother said at Tuesday's press conference. He was still in school when his parents took the bills to the FBI office in Portland.

Himmelsbach, who said soon after the hijacking that Cooper had less than a 50-50 chance of having survived, said Sunday's find confirmed his earlier conclusion.

"This is strong evidence that Cooper didn't survive," he said, "but we have no proof of that."

Himmelsbach said all the evidence points to Cooper's having bailed out over La Center. But he may have drifted farther east than the experts computed. He may have landed in the Washougal watershed, where the money could have found its way into the stream and been washed down to the Columbia by successive floods.

Himmelsbach discounted the possibility that the bag full of money could have torn loose from Cooper's waist when he stepped off the rear stairway of the plane into a 200-mile-an-hour slipstream.

"But we don't know," he emphasized.

Baker said detailed plans for a further search had not been formulated, but said he would expect to search up the Columbia to the Washougal — the first tributary to flow into the river above Vancouver — and may extend the search up the Washougal itself.

Bills 1st solid clue in hijack mystery

By LEVERETT RICHARDS
of The Oregonian staff

The weathered bundles of $20 bills found on the Washington bank of the Columbia River nine miles northwest of Vancouver on Sunday were the first solid clues to the mystery of the "Dan Cooper" aircraft hijacking, FBI agents said Tuesday.

One of the more intensive searches in the FBI's history had failed to turn up any clue to the fate of the mysterious hijacker or his loot during the eight years since he bailed out of a Northwest Orient Airlines Boeing 727 flying at 7,000 feet over La Center, Wash., on Nov. 24, 1971, FBI spokesmen said.

Cooper's was the first hijacking of a commercial airliner for money, and started a chain of similar attempts, which was responsible in part for the rigid security system now enforced at all United States airports and most major airports abroad.

Because of an erroneous report of the name used by the hijacker, he became known nationally as D.B. Cooper, although the airline manifest showed he had used the name "Dan."

The man who called himself Cooper paid cash for a ticket and boarded Northwest's Flight 305 at Portland International Airport just before it departed. He sat in a rear seat in the cabin and waited until the plane was airborne. Then he handed stewardess Florence Schaffner a note saying he had a bomb in the satchel he was carrying and demanding $200,000 in unmarked $20 bills.

By the time the plane landed at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport at 5:45 p.m., airline officials were gathering the money and the four parachutes he had demanded. The hijacker released the 36 passengers on board, along with all crew members except one stewardess and two pilots. The plane then took off and headed south at 7,000 feet in stormy weather.

At 8:10 p.m. the pilots felt a fluctuation in cabin pressure which indicated the rear door had been opened. Later tests showed this was when the hijacker had bailed out, taking with him the money and the device that he claimed was a bomb.

Computer calculations and a later reconstruction of the flight persuaded the FBI that Cooper had bailed out near Woodland, Wash., and would have landed somewhere west of Lake Merwin.

William Rataczak, first officer (copilot) on the hijacked plane who flew the later reconstructions of the hijack flight, said the pilots received no answer when they called on the interphone to their passenger and were not certain he was gone until they landed in Reno, Nev., at 11 p.m.

The "target area" was searched repeatedly by the FBI, other law enforcement officers and soldiers from Fort Lewis, Wash., but no trace of man or money was found. Northwest Airlines offered a reward, since expired, and hunters and woodsmen continued the search for years without success.

Before Sunday, the only item that had been found from the hijacking was a placard believed to have blown off the bulkhead of the 727 when the door was opened in flight.

It was found 13 miles east of Castle Rock, Wash., in January 1979. The placard, if indeed it came from the hijacked plane, "helped to confirm that the plane was on course all the way, but didn't shed any light on what happened to Cooper," said FBI agent Ralph Himmelsbach, who headed the investigation.

After eight years of investigation, Himmelsbach has said he still believes Cooper could not have survived the parachute jump at 7 degrees below zero, dressed as he was in a light business suit and street shoes.

'Cooper expert' to close out career

The finding of some of the "Dan Cooper" hijacking money Sunday came as a dramatic climax to the career of Sean Ralph Himmelsbach, the FBI's Cooper expert.

Himmelsbach, himself a veteran pilot, has lived, breathed and slept the Dan Cooper case ever since a man using that name hijacked a Northwest Airlines jet from Portland on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971.

Himmelsbach, who has logged thousands of hours of flying time in his own 1952 model single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza, was aloft in an Oregon Air National Guard helicopter ready to intercept the hijacked plane within a few minutes after the airliner took off from Seattle, where Cooper obtained $200,000 and four parachutes. But the air turbulence that night was so severe that the helicopter was ordered back to Portland Airbase.

Next morning Himmelsbach started the first of a series of flights which took him the length of the hijack route many times, between investigating other clues, all of which proved to be false.

"I was over the target area near Lake Merwin Sunday again," he said Tuesday. "I saw they had logged a lot of prime search area, and thought something would turn up now."

But he never guessed the news that would confront him when he reported for work Monday.

"I'll admit to a certain sense of satisfaction," Himmelsbach said Tuesday, flashing a broad smile. "The case isn't solved, but this is certainly a major milestone."

Himmelsbach will retire March 1, after 27 years with the FBI — climaxed by his work on the Cooper case, one that will go down in FBI history.

Fishing for D.B.Cooper's loot

WASHOUGAL — Bob Devaney watched the ducks peck away at something floating in the Washougal River near the Riverside Bowl.

It was March 22, 1977, and Devaney of 4221 F Circle, Washougal, was fishing for steelhead. The muddy runoff waters had cleared, and the river was in shape for catching the ocean-going trout.

"I watched the ducks nibbling away," Devaney said. "I waded out to see. That's when I saw the money. At first, I thought it was play money."

But Devaney picked up a bill and examined it. It was a real $20 bill, and there were six others to be grabbed from atop the water.

Devaney's story became more significant last week when part of the D.B. Cooper hijacking money was found washed up on a Columbia River beach nine miles downstream from Vancouver. One theory contends the money could have washed out of the Washougal River watershed during the nearly 8½ years since Cooper parachuted from an airliner over Southwest Washington.

A check with the Federal Bureau of Investigation list of serial numbers on the $200,000 given Cooper didn't match those found by Devaney. Devaney still has his $140 tucked away in cellophane bags.

The D.B. Cooper money find also brought significance to a green bank bag found by Jack Smith who lives up the Washougal River in Skamania County.

on Highway 140 in March 1976 when he spotted what looked like a woman's purse in the roadway.

The purse turned out to be a bank bag with $6,040 inside, all 20s, except for two 10s.

"Being an honest person, I turned it in," Smith said. "Then I waited a year. The FBI checked to see if it was part of the Cooper money. I wasn't."

After a year, no one claimed it, so Smith got half. Under state statute, the other half of the money goes to the state general fund.

Devaney's and Smith's experiences may mean that the Washougal River, while possibly not the source of the Cooper money, is a veritable stash of someone else's.

In fact, soon after the Cooper money was found near Vancouver, an FBI agent said an anonymous person called to tell agents that three 20s folded together were found in the river. The caller said they were already spent, ruling out a serial number comparison.

While Devaney has kept his money, Smith spent his $3,020.

"I didn't have to 'launder' it," Smith said. "I used it to drill my well and put in a septic tank."

With tales of money along the Washougal River and the possibility of the D.B. Cooper cash coming from its watershed, suprisingly, no FBI agents have seemed to be around asking the river folks if they know of money being found.

"I haven't seen anyone that well dressed today," said Sharrol Fuller, one of the owners of the Riverside Grocery, a meeting place for Washougal River residents.

Geologist's finding contradicts theory

By Bud May
The Daily News

A thorough search of a Columbia River beach where part of D.B. Cooper's ransom money was found Sunday has turned up no new clues as to the fate of the legendary skyjacker.

The FBI said today that the search will continue today and Friday, then probably be suspended temporarily.

Brought to the beach to aid in Wednesday's search were a backhoe and a geologist.

The FBI said the backhoe was used to dig a trench near the discovery site, making possible a study of the layers to sand.

An associate professor of geology at Portland State University, Leonard Palmer, was retained to inspect the sand and to assist investigators in determining when the bundled money may have been deposited there.

Palmer, to the surprise of some authorities, concluded that the money was deposited on the beach in the past year or two because it was above clay deposits put on the beach in a 1974 channel dredging operation.

According to the FBI, a coarse layer of sand sloped from a height of about six inches at the river's edge to two feet or more some distance up the river bank.

Earlier, Ralph Himmelsbach, a Portland FBI agent who has had charge of following new leads in the Cooper case for a number of years, said he believed the money must have been deposited within a couple of years after the skyjacking.

He says discovery of the money provided a major break in the case, but puts authorities no closer to locating Cooper, whom Himmelsbach believes is dead.

Agents say the money was tied to Cooper when he bailed out of the plane, but was no longer with him when it was deposited on the beach.

If it had still been attached to his body at the bottom of the river when the channel was dredged in 1974, the body would have clogged up the dredge and have been found, agents believe.

Jack Pringle, assistant agent in charge of the Seattle FBI Office, told The Daily News this morning that small bits and pieces of $20 bills were located Wednesday when agents continued digging in sand surrounding the spot where a Vancouver family discovered money Sunday.

The Harold Dwayne Ingram family was on an outing north and west of Vancouver when their 8-year-old son, Brian, uncovered several thousand dollars in decomposed bills.

Ingram contacted the Portland FBI Office, and a check of serial numbers conclusively established that the money was part of $200,000 in $20 bills Cooper had when he bailed out of a Northwest Orient Airlines jet over the Lewis River area on Nov. 24, 1971.

Pringle said the area was still being searched today, but no new evidence had been located as of this forenoon.

"Some of the area is inaccessible, and there's no way we can search the whole area," Pringle said in Seattle this morning.

Finder of Cooper loot gets frayed $20 bill

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Eight-year-old Brian Ingram, who found bundles of $20 bills last week but had to turn them over to authorities, has been given one by the FBI.

The boy jumped into the national spotlight Feb. 10 when he discovered several thousand dollars of the $200,000 ransom paid to skyjacker Dan Cooper in 1971. The money, frayed around the edges, was identified by FBI agents who have been looking for Cooper since he jumped from a Northwest Orient Airlines plane over Southwest Washington.

The $20 was given to the boy by Mike Heywood, Hough Elementary School PTA president. Accompanying the bill was a certificate praising the boy for his find.

Since finding the money, Brian and his parents, H. Dwayne and Patricia, have been the subject of network television newscasts and newspaper articles. Saturday night, the three were satirized on the "Weekend Update" segment of the weekly television show "Saturday Night Live."

Cooper a hero or crook?

By Bud May
The Daily News

If they ever create a hall of fame for lawbreakers, D.B. Cooper will certainly have an honored spot as the perpetrator of America's only unsolved skyjacking.

But does that make him a hero, or just a criminal pictured by some as a Robin Hood character who stymied the establishment?

An exception is Dave Fisher, who operates the Store and Tavern along with his wife, Laurel.

"I'll admit he's a crook, like most of the people here, I hope he got away and on the loose. People here, I put Ariel on the map, and we're kind of rooting for him," Fisher said.

Gordon Connell, a Kelso hardware store owner, disagrees.

"I think D.B. Cooper is a long way from being a hero. He is or was a common crook who stole someone else's money; and if he's found alive, he should be punished fully.

"I also think it's asinine that people form D.B. Cooper clubs, hold D.B. Cooper parties, print D.B. Cooper T-shirts and find other ways to glorify him," Connell said.

Conrad Bankson, principal at the Mint Valley School in Longview, has similar views.

"What he did was sensational, but keep in mind that kidnapping and demanding ransom are serious crimes. If he's ever found alive, which I doubt, he should get the full penalty of the law."

Pausing, Bankson added, "If he's dead, perhaps nature provided the ultimate penalty."

John Hayes, operator of a service station in Kelso, had nothing good to say about the man sought since bailing out of a Northwest Orient Airlines jet over the Lewis River area on Nov. 24, 1971.

"D.B. Cooper broke the law, and he sure doesn't deserve sympathy. I give him credit for being smart, but I still think he's a damn crook, and I hope he's brought to justice," Hayes commented.

A Castle Rock housewife, Margaret Kotera, considers Cooper a man who risked the lives of innocent persons for personal gain.

"I don't admire him. When you take the law into your own hands and endanger other people's lives you are no hero," she said.

Some citizens polled concede Cooper was a lawbreaker, but credit him with being a one-of-a-kind crook who made a lot of people scratch their heads.

Norma Sewell of Kelso, a deputy clerk at the County Clerk's Office, characterized the skyjacker in that manner.

"He's an out and out crook, but he carried out his crime spectacularly, and he's baffled some very good police minds for nearly nine years," she said.

Dick Wilson, plant manager at Longview Ice and Cold Storage, sees Cooper as a criminal whose crime brought him endless publicity.

"There's no doubt he was a crook, but he sure got a lot of advertising. Not everyone has a name on T-shirts," Wilson said.

Whatever his detractors say, Cooper still has some fans.

Minutes after Tuesday's announcement that some of the ransom money had been found, a Portland parking garage attendant told this reporter, "I sure hope this doesn't mean he's dead. I've always hoped he got away."

Cooper a hero or crook?

By Bud May
The Daily News

If they ever create a hall of fame for lawbreakers, D.B. Cooper will certainly have an honored spot as the perpetrator of America's only unsolved skyjacking.

But does that make him a hero, or just a criminal pictured by some as a Robin Hood character who stymied the establishment?

The legendary man had few admirers among people whose opinions were solicited by The Daily News today.

An exception is Dave Fisher, who operates the Ariel Store and Tavern along with his wife, Laurel.

"I'll admit he's a crook, but like most of the people up here, I hope he got away and is on the loose. People here feel he put Ariel on the map, and we're kind of rooting for him," Fisher said.

Gordon Connell, a Kelso hardware store owner, disagrees.

"I think D.B. Cooper is a long way from being a hero. He is or was a common crook who stole someone else's money; and if he's found alive, he should be punished fully.

"I also think it's asinine that people form D.B. Cooper clubs, hold D.B. Cooper parties, print D.B. Cooper T-shirts and find other ways to glorify him," Connell said.

Conrad Bankson, principal at the Mint Valley School in Longview, has similar views.

"What he did was sensational, but keep in mind that kidnapping and demanding ransom are serious crimes. If he's ever found alive, which I doubt, he should get the full penalty of the law."

Pausing, Bankson added, "If he's dead, perhaps nature provided the ultimate penalty."

FBI calls off search for more hijack money

The FBI has, at least temporarily, called off its search along the Columbia River for more of the money obtained eight years ago by the airplane hijacker who used the name Dan Cooper.

Jack Pringle, assistant special agent in charge of the FBI's Seattle office, said the search was called off late Thursday night after several days of sand-sifting produced no new evidence. The Seattle office has coordinated search efforts in the Cooper caper, the only unresolved hijacking on record since it occurred in 1971.

Pringle said search efforts might be renewed next week, after the results of laboratory tests are received on the several thousand dollars in badly decayed $20 bill fragments found by a picnicking family Sunday about nine miles downstream from Vancouver.

He said there was a chance the tests "could find additional debris that might give us an idea where (the money) may have been" before it washed onto the river bank.

A geologist serving as consultant to the FBI has said he believes the money had spent most of the past eight years underwater and was deposited on the sandy beach only within the past year.

The Northwest Airlines plane was hijacked between Portland and Seattle by a man who said he had a bomb. The hijacker obtained $200,000 in $20 bills when the plane landed in Seattle and then parachuted with the money over Southwest Washington.

The bills found Sunday represented the first trace of the hijacker or money since the Thanksgiving Eve hijack occurred.

FBI agents wield rakes, shovels in 'treasure hunt'

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Guernsey cattle and puzzled fishermen watched with curiosity Tuesday as 20 casually attired FBI agents combed the Columbia River shoreline near here, looking for more of a hijacker's treasure.

The agents, working with garden rakes and shovels, carefully sifted through the sand on what is known locally as Tena's Bar, a sloping beach about nine miles northwest of Vancouver. The beach is owned by New Columbia Gardens Co., which operates a truck and dairy farm behind the beach.

What attracted the searchers was the find Sunday afternoon of a dozen bundles of worn $20 bills, part of the ransom paid more than eight years ago to the legendary "Dan Cooper." A man using that name hijacked a Northwest Airlines jetliner in November 1971 and parachuted out of the aircraft with 21 pounds of cash totaling $200,000.

The bundles on the beach were found by 8-year-old Brian Ingram, who was helping his parents, Harold Dwayne and Patricia Ingram, build a fire for a picnic. The family, which moved to Vancouver recently from Oklahoma, had never heard of the man who was widely known at the time of his crime as D.B. Cooper.

Dorwyn Schreuder, the FBI agent supervising the beach search, said the Ingrams put the money aside after discovering it and continued with their picnic. They reported their discovery to the FBI on Monday.

The site, a popular fishing spot for Vancouver residents, was guarded by agents Monday night and the search started about noon Tuesday.

Agents roped off a section of beach measuring roughly 150 yards long and 30 yards wide. All driftwood was removed, and then began the laborious task of raking through sand at least 6 inches deep.

The Ingrams' find had been about 6 inches beneath the surface, Schreuder said. FBI agents Tuesday afternoon found fragments of at least two other $20 bills. By late Tuesday, several more fragments had been found as deep as 3 feet below the surface.

"We'll be taking some heavy equipment, probably backhoes, in there Wednesday to dig deeper," said Bill Baker, assistant special agent in charge of the Portland FBI office.

Schreuder and other agents at the site said they still supported the long-held FBI theory that Cooper died in his parachuting attempt.

"He's probably not alive today," Schreuder said. "If he were, I think he'd be with his money."

The FBI initially was cautious about disclosing the precise location of the discovery. Operators of the farm said they knew something was unusual when several cars streamed along a road leading through the farmyard to the beach.

"We didn't know what it was about until we heard it on the radio," said one farm employee.

And three fishermen who routinely spend every day but Sundays fishing on the beach initially were confused and then angry.

"These guys wouldn't tell us what was going on," said Ken Davenport of Vancouver. "They asked us to move, but wouldn't tell us who they were or

Another fisherman, Mike Haddican, of Vancouver, said they knew something was up "because everybody was getting out of cars with shovels instead of fishing poles."

The Guernsey cows watched the beach show from their pens on a small bluff, scattering occasionally when helicopters chartered by news organizations flew overhead.

Within an hour after the FBI announced where the money had been found, private automobiles streamed down Northwest Lower River Road, a narrow two-lane road leading to the farm. A Clark County sheriff's deputy guarded the entrance, preventing the public from getting to the beach.

FBI agents were to remain on the scene overnight to keep out would-be treasure hunters.

The FBI said how much of the beach would be searched would be determined after the agency consulted with hydrologists and others who could provide expert advice about from where the money may have come.

Only half-joking, Schreuder said the agents "could search all the beach from here to Astoria."

Punk or Paradox, the Legend Lives On

By Darrell Bob-Houston

I walked into the airport bookstore, vowing that this would be my last D. B. Cooper gimmick.

I waited until the clerk was busy. Then — at eye level — I placed three copies of my skyjack novel on a display rack. D. B.'s face, masked as always by the world's most famous sunglasses, stared back from the covers.

My heart was pounding. They arrest people for ripping books off. But what about ripping them on? D. B. Cooper's picture at a Northwest airport! That's like Jimmy Carter bumper stickers in Tehran!

I left the store, then made a new entrance. I wanted to view the books with fresh eyes, see them as a between-planes passenger might.

I stared into those Victor Mature goggles. I felt, again, that there was nothing behind them; no eyebrows, no cynical gleam, no madman's wink. As always I was struck by the beautiful blandness of D. B.'s face. No, you would not buy a used car from such a man. He'd give it to you, free.

His suitcoat was equally intriguing. A dark meshed knit, it had a professional quality to it. I suspect it had leather elbow patches.

The knot of Cooper's tie is about the size of a prune. The tie is meager and black. It is somewhat faded, as if it had sunned for a long time in a pawnshop window.

Then I noticed something that had escaped me. There is a faint smile on D. B.'s lips. A quirk of the artist's pen, of course. The likeness is only a facsimile after all. Still . . .

A shrill female voice shattered my reverie.

"Sex and skyjacking! And a monster like that awful D. B. Cooper! You should be ashamed."

The woman had confronted the clerk. She had a copy of my book in her hand. I noticed that in her anger she was flecking D. B.'s face with spit.

She slammed the book down. She passed me on the way out. I was still admiring my literary efforts.

Pointing, the woman asked if I was going to buy "one of those."

"The Marquis de Sade," I said, "I'm looking for his complete works."

Anticipating her gasp, I added: "And a good clean family cookbook, of course."

She was not amused.

"Do you mean you actually condone that Cooper trash?"

"Of course not, madame," I replied. "All I did was write it."

The woman scurried off. I think she went after a security guard. I grabbed my skyjack books and ran.

When Buffalo Bill Cody fought his duel with Chief Yellow Hand, his combat outfit consisted of a Mexican suit of crushed black velvet. It was slashed with scarlet and trimmed with silver buttons and lace. Cody had so completely blended the real and the theatrical that nobody — least of all Bill himself — could tell where the actual ended and the dime novel began.

The same thing happened during my quest for D. B. The facts that I had in my burgeoning Cooper file were not enough. I began to fantasize in the stories I wrote; but the more I fabricated the truer they sounded.

All I had to do was tap a typewriter key and the skyjacker would jump — any way I wanted him to. Many of the "facts" I propagated were repeated by other writers, and sometimes by the authorities.

Even the intellectual readers were not immune to D. B.'s magic. Reporting in a high-brow California magazine, I told how a lot of people up in Washington still think the hijacker was captured by the Sasquatch.

The story was illustrated with a full-page color drawing of Bigfoot, looking somewhat bereft without Fay Wray, scattering ransom money to the wind. Behind him the visage of D. B. Cooper — a rocky outcropping formed his nose — was superimposed on the heights of Mount St. Helens. A string of sky-written clouds spelled out $200,000.

My province was of the imagination. But it was by no means an exclusive domain.

Larry Feingold, a Seattle attorney and former FBI agent, had his own fantasy problem. To assuage it, he planned to hold a reunion of the 36 passengers who were aboard Flight 305 with Cooper. Feingold was one of them.

He wanted to find out how the experience had affected all those lives. Personally, he felt haunted by the memory.

"It's difficult now to separate fact from fantasy," Feingold said. "I'm no longer sure what I saw — and I was trained by the FBI. I think I got a good, solid look at Cooper's face. Now I don't know."

"It was so quiet on the plane. People were sleeping. It was like a submarine. Eerie, ghost-like. The whole thing is like some kind of flying dream from which none of us has yet awakened."

For the past couple of years the D. B. front has been rather quiet. People have occasionally asked me where I stashed all those unmarked twenties. I have still registered at hotels as D. B. Cooper and every Thanksgiving Eve I have lifted a glass to my wraith-like benefactor.

Then, last Tuesday, came a phone call from a friend.

"Take a deep breath, sit down in your chair — and hold onto the edges," he said. "Some kid down in Vancouver just found part of D. B.'s loot."

My first thought was: And some diver looking for abalone will find Atlantis.

"What did the kid look like?"

"Imagine Huckleberry Finn in a pair of run-over Adidas," my friend said.

I hardly had to look at Brian Ingram's picture in the papers the next morning. I already knew him. In the movie script I had written, but never sold, he was D. B. Cooper as a lad. Right down to the unruly hair and the gap in his front teeth.

One scene still comes through.

The boy has been left alone in a boxcar with a band of hobos. His father misses the train as it pulls out of a bleak wintertime siding somewhere in Oklahoma.

The young D. B. sobs. He thinks he will never see his dad again. Suddenly Old Man Cooper swings through the boxcar doorway.

"How'd you do it, Pa?" the boy asks.

"I snagged the caboose and crawled across the top. Wind like to blow me off a dozen times."

"You're my hero, Pa."

"I'd rather . . . just be your father."

"What do you mean, Pa?"

Old Man Cooper adjusts his rump to the hard, cold floor.

"Because," he says, "heroes always end up like this boxcar. Stuffy — and hard to ride with."

"Yes, sir, Pa," the boy says. "Yes, sir, and amen."

When Hollywood makes the D. B. movie, I hope there's a part for Brian Ingram. The kid is a natural.

People are again asking me the $200,000 question: Is D.B. Cooper dead or alive?

Since the whole episode is a movie anyway, I turn to the silver screen for my reply.

I hearken to the white stallion in "Viva Zapata!" Zapata has been ambushed and killed, but his horse runs away.

"The horse, the horse!" the assassins cry. "Get the horse!"

Too late. Mane flying, the stallion thunders off into the hills, drumming the legend of Emiliano Zapata with each mercurial stride.

So it is with D. B. Cooper, the first — and probably the last — successful parachute skyjacker.

They can find all of the ransom money, they can dredge up bones and skulls, they can prove beyond a doubt that D. B. drowned in the icy waters of the Washougal or the Lewis rivers.

But his legend will never die; the white horse will gallop free for as long as men tell stories and writers ply the midnight Remington.

Punk or paragon, cutthroat or avatar, see him as you will.

But yes, gentle reader, D. B. Cooper lives.

He lives in your dreams — and in mine.

No money, no fish

Treasure hunters fail to find more Cooper loot

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — When the fellas gather at Tena Bar, fish stories abound. Hardly anyone wants to talk about the D.B. Cooper money that got away.

Tena Bar isn't a local watering hole. It's a local fishing hole — and the sand bar on the Columbia River on which the D.B. Cooper loot was found recently.

For awhile, all sorts of people gathered at the bar to search for some of the $200,000 ransom money taken by Cooper in the nation's first hijacking-for-profit nine years ago, after a boy found weathered packets of $20 bills in the sand.

On Wednesday, however, the only evidence of last week's frantic search of the beach by FBI agents were mounds of sand turned up by the searchers.

"We haven't seen anybody," said Bill Holcomb, a Vancouver resident and frequenter of Tena Bar.

Holcomb was fishing there with Virgil Nichols and Ken Troupe, both of Vancouver. The trio made up the entire fishing population of Tena Bar on Wednesday.

"We drag junk out of this river every day. Plastic, old shoes, things like that," said Nichols. "But never any money."

"There may be money here, but there's no fish," Holcomb said.

A long trench on the beach dug for use by river experts studying the layers of sand has been refilled, as has the large hole around the spot where 8-year-old Brian Ingram found the Cooper money. Cooper hijacked a Northwest Airlines plane in 1971 and jumped from the back of the jet with $200,000.

tion, seem glad it's over.

"As soon as the FBI left Friday," said Richard Fazio, "Two people came, got stuck in the sand, and wanted me to pull them out. I did, and then I went up to close the gate."

Meanwhile, local FBI agents assigned to the case are awaiting the results of tests of the money by the bureau's crime lab in Washington, D.C., and checking all the leads that invariably crop up when anything to do with the Cooper case is publicized.

"Every time you have anything on the Cooper case that gets any publicity, the fallout is a great number of leads — look-a-like leads.

that sort of thing," said Ray Mathis, of the FBI's office in Seattle.

"And we have to check them all out."

The question of who eventually will get the money apparently has not been settled. Guy Staffa, of Royal Insurance in New York, the firm that repaid Northwest Airlines $180,000 from the $200,000 loss, said the FBI had not yet contacted the firm.

"We've had no official word confirming that this is the money," Staffa said. "If it is, we would have an interest in the recovery along with the insured (Northwest Airlines)."

RE: D.D. Cooper

I had the pleasure, or should I say the opportunity of talking to D.D. Cooper in Portland Oregon, in a night club, right after his celebrated Hijacking, in which he parachuted out of an airplane, and into history.

It was actually a chance meeting, but he was talking to me in a low voice about how he didn't need the money, only the prestige of knowing that the F.B.I. could be had, he stated to me that the F.B.I. only respect a sharp. and wise criminal, and that the sharper you are the less crime that you do.

D.D. Cooper mentioned to me that the latest pictures of him in the paper were not accurate, and that he was going to have Plastic Surgery, his words were Cosmetic Surgery.

D.D. Cooper was the coolest man that I had ever met, he seemed so professional; He talked of pulling one more job, on the level of the great Brinks robbery, this was to be done in Las Vegas, because he stated that few people had ever pulled off a big heist in Las Vegas, and lived to tell about it; I replied; D.D. That's Mafia money you're talking about, and he said yeah, I know, that's what keeps me motivated.

I'll say one thing for D.D. he loves Tattoos, he has them all over his arms, and legs. He claims that he paid a fortune to have them did when he was in the army.

I could go on talking about D.D. Cooper all day, but I must close now; For D.D. Along with Former President Richard M. Nixon are like so many other self-tortured souls who are vengeful of the F.B.I. for turning them down, when they so desperately wanted to be a member of the F.B.I.

F.B.I. says remains aren't D.B. Cooper's

VANCOUVER, Wash. — Human skeletal remains found in a rough section of Southwest Washington are those of a teen-age girl and not the bones of D.B. Cooper, the airline hijacker, said Federal Bureau of Investigation officials yesterday.

Special Agent John Pringle said Dr. Arch Hamilton, Clark County coroner, determined the skull found near the western boundary of the Gifford Pinchot National Forest belonged to a young girl.

Pringle said the girl's age or identity has not been determined.

The skull and other bones were found Sunday by Jack Bannister, of Yacolt, Clark County, and his son, Jack, as they were panning for gold about five miles from Yacolt, according to the Clark County sheriff's office.

While the sheriff's office said it didn't think the bones belonged to the famed hijacker, speculation had run high that the skull was Cooper's because it was found in the general area where Cooper bailed out of a plane with $200,000.

Cooper hijacked the plane in Seattle in November, 1971, after picking up $200,000 and bailed out somewhere over Southwestern Washington.

No trace of Cooper had been found until a 8-year-old boy found some of the $20 bills along the Columbia River two weeks ago.

Cooper book could blend fact, fantasy

LOOK FOR a book or two on D.B. Cooper to show up in the next few weeks or months.

A news source claims a writer has secured documents on the case from the FBI through the Freedom of Information Act and hopes to weave a tale out of the skyjacking that has kept people wondering for 8½ years.

It wouldn't be surprising to see more than one author try to cash in on the recently rekindled publicity about the incident. Cashing in like that seems to be more in vogue these days than it was in 1971, when Cooper disappeared.

Authors of those kinds of books often report theory and supposition as well as fact. Sometimes it's hard to tell the difference between what the writers know and what they think or assume.

Some authors make no bones about mixing fact and fantasy. Take .44, the semifiction book about the Son of Sam murders in New York by Jimmy Breslin and Dick Schaap. Breslin and Schaap admit in the foreword to the book that they changed the names of the characters and the sequence of events, and embellished on the story.

They graphically detailed what their deranged killer was thinking about, for example, but it was obviously what the authors thought the killer was thinking. Of course, it added greatly to the drama of the book.

Breslin and Schaap said the embellishment was legitimate because they wanted to recreate the atmosphere of the murders, to portray in fiction the gut-level realism of the crimes.

Although the skyjacking was hardly as heinous a crime as a New York murder spree, that mixture of fact and fantasy might be what you'll see in the D.B. Cooper book, assuming there indeed is one in the making. The Cooper author would have an easy time cooking up a tale of where the hijacker came from and what happened to him, and the story could be quite readable.

If he has any trouble making up a story about who Cooper was or what happened to him, he could look piles of newspaper clippings that report on different people's theories on the subject. But with all the leads the FBI says it has tracked down, there can hardly be a lack of ideas about Cooper's fate.

As far as distinguishing fact from fantasy, we hope the newspapers have done their duty in labeling theories as what they are. It would be nice if any books on the matter did the same.

We probably can't take the word of anybody but Cooper himself on what actually took place. But although the FBI, which must track down every lead, might disagree, it sure is fun to guess about what happened to the old boy.

Agent in D.B. Cooper case retires

PORTLAND — For more than eight years, Ralph Himmelsbach, an agent with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, followed a narrow trail of clues and tips in his quest of a legendary hijacker called D.B. Cooper. But the first real break in the case didn't come until Himmelsbach's F.B.I. career was drawing to a close.

After 29 years with the bureau, Himmelsbach retired as of Friday, a few months before he reaches the mandatory-retirement age of 55.

Himmelsbach was the agent regarded as the bureau's expert on the puzzling case that started when the still-unknown sky pirate leaped from a Northwest Airlines 727 with 10,000 $20 bills and two parachutes on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971.

Nothing has been heard of Cooper; and nothing was seen of the money until an 8-year-old boy found about $5,800 of it mixed in the sand along the Columbia River near Vancouver, Wash., February 10.

"It's been an interesting case and I have enjoyed the investigation because of the things that have happened," Himmelsbach said. "It altered my life because of all the attention I have received."

But, he added, "I think I'll walk away from it and it will never bother me."

FBI agents comb Columbia River bank near Vancouver for additional money or clues to the fate of airline hijacker D.B. Cooper.

Stacks of rotting $20 bills found near the Oregon-Washington border were identified as part of the loot paid to a vanished hijacker known only as D.B. Cooper.

Rotting Cash a Clue To 1971 Hijacking

The Los Angeles Times
Washington—A young Vancouver, Wash., family on an outing along the Columbia River Sunday suddenly stumbled across 12 stacks of moldering money—part of $200,000 that notorious airline hijacker D.B. Cooper had made off with more than eight years ago, the FBI said yesterday.
With the bills traced to the Cooper loot, 30 agents from the Portland and Seattle FBI offices have begun a search of the area for more of the money—and possibly some sign of Cooper or, more likely, his remains.
The family found the money—"several thousand dollars," according to one official—about five miles northwest of the Interstate bridge that spans the Columbia and separates Washington from Oregon, FBI agent William M. Baker said in Portland. The bills were partly buried in sand that the family was scooping out to build a fire.
The discovery, by Harold Dwayne Ingram, 7, his wife, Patricia, 26, and their 8- and 3-year-old sons, marked the latest twist in the bizarre saga of the now-legendary Cooper, who parachuted from a Northwest Airlines jetliner on Thanksgiving Eve, 1971, never to be seen or heard from again.
Law enforcement authorities long have believed that Cooper died in his plunge from the Boeing 727, because he was wearing only a business suit and street shoes when he jumped into a howling wind and freezing rain with an unreliable parachute.

The saga began when Cooper boarded the jetliner in Portland for a flight to Seattle. Once airborne, he demanded that the airline have $200,000 in $20 bills and three parachutes on hand when the plane landed in Seattle. He threatened to blow up the plane if his demands were not met. The airline complied, providing the parachutes and money. The FBI said yesterday that the serial numbers of the bills had been recorded.
Cooper permitted the airliner's 36 passengers to leave the plane in Seattle. He then ordered the crew to head for Reno and told the pilot to fly at a relatively low altitude and open the plane's rear stairway.
Crew members said they believed he jumped, using the least reliable parachute, over southwest Washington. Law enforcement officials have theorized that his body is in Lake Merwin, 30 miles north of Portland, or entangled in thick bushes. The decomposed money was found 17 to 20 miles from what is believed to have been the jump site.

Discovered 'Cooper' bills only

$5,800, says F.B.I.

VANCOUVER, Wash. — (AP) — The crumbling remains of $20 bills unearthed by a Vancouver family more than two weeks ago represents about $5,800 of the $200,000 taken in the 1971 D.B. Cooper skyjacking, the Federal Bureau of Investigation says.

Ray Mathis, senior agent, said officials counted the decaying greenbacks during F.B.I. laboratory tests in Washington, D.C.

Otis Cox of the bureau's Washington, D.C., office said little else has been revealed about the money. Lab technicians continue to study the loot, particularly for evidence of where it might have been before it washed up on the banks of the Columbia River, Otis said.

The lumpy wads of money were found buried in shallow sand west of here.

The fate of Cooper, America's first skyjacker-for-money, has never been learned, although the F.B.I. maintains he is probably long dead.

WXIA-TV
1611 W. Peachtree St.
Atlanta, GA 30309

December 31, 1979

Dear [redacted]

First, let me assure you: I am D.B. Cooper, the individual who completed the skyjacking in 1969. Of course, you -- and any of your colleagues -- may choose to disbelieve this: our society is comprised of individuals who, strangely enough, believe in that which is untrue, disbelieve in that which is fact.

Nevertheless, I have decided that it is time for a bit of communication. Somewhat rather smugly observing the minor fanfare my ten-year anniversary caused in the media this November, I suddenly realized that I wanted people to know I was still alive -- and that I had, in fact, successfully eluded the police and lived -- very nicely, I might add -- on the proceeds of my adventure.

I moved to Atlanta more than five years ago and began watching your newscasts. You seemed to have a "no-nonsense" approach to the news which I can appreciate -- and thus, when I finally decided to communicate w/ the outside world, you appeared the natural choice.

I'd like to clear up two items concerning my little event. First, I did it for the sheer sake of adventure, nothing more. And this adventure was both a mental & physical challenge -- which leads me to my second item: how I eluded the police. While I shall not detail the incident -- at least not now -- I will say that it was a simple case of using simplicity when everyone else concentrated on complexity. If the police ever do discover how I did it, they will feel a bit foolish. And I even left a bit of a clue, which still remains in the area: I was back there this past summer.

[redacted] you have a wonderful city and I have enjoyed my stay. I own a house in the city and am delighted with the many cultural opportunities here. Indeed, I hope to remain in Atlanta for at least a few more years.

Again, whether or not you believe this is "the real thing" does not concern me. I am very much aware that it is & simply wished a bit of communication with the outside world. I might call you sometime in the future ... and if so, I have enclosed an index card with something typed on it: when I call, I will identify myself by what has been typed. In addition, you can be assured of only one "authentic" D.B. Cooper.

I wish you a Happy New Year and thank you for this opportunity to communicate after 10 years...

D.B. Cooper

[redacted] was interviewed by SA [redacted] [redacted] of the Portland, Oregon, FBI Office.

b6

[redacted] advised that he found the beach area in the vicinity where the money was found to be in approximately four different layers. These layers consisted of an upper sand layer, a post dredging sand layer, a clay lump (dredge) sand layer, and below that an older sand layer. The upper layer consisted of six inches to eight inches of reworked beach sand and is the sand which contained the fragments and bundles of the recovered money. This sand also contained soda pop cans and other debris, which were not severely damaged or rusted. The post dredging sand contained older soda pop cans, rusted nails and spikes, and other rusted artifacts, which were in a much more deteriorated condition. The clay lump (dredge) sand was a mixture of course sand and fragments of organic clay material, ranging from one inch to five inches in size. Based on U.S. Corps of Engineering records which reflect that they dredged the Columbia River at this site in 1974, [redacted] stated this clay layer in all probability, was deposited during that 1974 dredging. The older sands, which were light in color and uniform in texture and which were found below the clay lump sand, were deposited prior to the 1974 dredging.

b7C

[redacted] advised that in the post dredging layer, he found cross bedded course and medium sand, which indicated the river and river waves had worked repeatedly on this layer since 1974. The upper six inches to eight inches of reworked beach sand is the active layer which is currently being worked by the water of the Columbia River.

b7C

Based on the condition of the money through observation, [redacted] advised that the money was probably washed into the location where it was found by natural river flow and was probably placed at the location of Tena Bar during the last rise in the Columbia River in the past two or three months.

ur agency:

PD 164-41

[] based this belief on three facts. The first fact being that the money was rounded off on the corners, which would indicate a rolling motion and would indicate the flow of the river. The second fact was that the money was found in the surface layer of the upper reworked beach sand. The third fact was that the distribution of the money was in this surface layer only, and none was found to be in the post dredging sand. When reminded of the fact that the rubber bands holding the money together were still in place, but extremely brittle and crumbled upon touch, [] stated that the condition of the rubber bands would tend to lend credence to the assumption that the money had been at the location where found a longer period of time. Even with this, he still felt the money was not at the site for more than a year. At the height found, the money was definitely deposited more than four years after the dredging of the Columbia River in 1974. He also added that he felt certain that the money did not work its way up through the post dredging sand to the upper layer.

[] found during his work at the site and areas surrounding the site, that the clay lump (dredged) sand ranging from a depth of approximately four feet, 25 yards from the money site, to only two feet where the money was found. He advised that this could be caused by many reasons, but most probably caused by the different elevations of the beach sand at the time the dredging occurred.

b7C

Regarding the fact that the money itself was remarkably well preserved, [] advised that sand is sterile, and in nature, is probably the best preservative of any soil. This could also be the reason that the rubber bands were still in place around the money, although they were badly deteriorated, and would also lead credence to the fact that the money had been deposited in sand the major portion of the time since it was lost. The money would not have lasted for more than a year in nature unless protected. He added that fragments of the money could have been washed anywhere down stream in the Columbia, but he doubted that any additional money found would be as well preserved unless it had been deposited in an upper layer of sand.

b7C

[] displayed a U.S. Geological Survey-Topographical Map, Bridal Veil Washington - Oregon Section, which reflected a twelve mile cross section of the drainage basin for the Washougal River. It is from this area, [] felt the money likely originated from. He stated that there was approximately one stream per mile of land in this area. If a person parachuted in this basin, he would most probably come to earth on land. Based on this fact, there is a good chance the money was carried to water rather than falling into it. If the money had not landed within ten feet of a stream, odds are almost zero that the money would make the stream.

b6

[redacted] concluded that he had been [redacted] [redacted] and his conclusions are based upon his experience in this field since that time.

[redacted] furnished a diagram of the beach sediment profile as it was found at Tena Bar. A xeroxed copy Material dredged from the river channel in the Columbia River was placed in several locations on or near

The material deposited on the beach was spread with tractors probably over a area of 50 yards in each direction. Because of the flow of the Columbia River, sand deposited on the bank by the dredge is washed away. Additionally, an amount of dredge material deposited on the beach slides back into the river. bait money found near the [REDACTED] on February 10, 1980, could have been brought to that area by a river feeding the Columbia River from the north.

b6

The area believed to be the drop zone of the subject in bounded on the north by the Lewis River, the east by the Clark County-Skamania County line, and the Columbia River.

[REDACTED] advised the only likely river feeding the Columbia River within the above described drop zone that would be capable of moving several bundles of money or a package about 16x16x4 inches to the Columbia River would be the Washougal River. A logical time, if the money came down the Washougal, would have been during the December 2, 1977

ten feet over the normal winter flood stage.

b6

There are several other streams that feed the Columbia River upstream from the [REDACTED] however, due to size, or the degree of slope of the streams, it is unlikely that a small package would have made it to the Columbia. It is also unlikely that a small package would have passed through Lacamas Lake downstream to the Columbia.

b6

[REDACTED] stated that based on the three feet per second speed of the Columbia River, if a small package entered the Columbia River at Washougal, Washington, and floated in the main stream of the river to the [REDACTED] a distance approximately thirty miles, it would take 14.7 hours. This is assuming that the package did not tumble along the bottom of the river or

Re Atlanta airtel to Seattle dated 7/23/79; and Seattle airtel to Atlanta 1/22/80.

On 2/1/80, Deputy U.S. Marshal [REDACTED] U.S. Marshal's Service, Rome, Georgia, was provided with composite photographs of subject. [REDACTED] advised that he had not actually seen the individual whom he believed might be identical with subject, but [REDACTED] had met this individual. His only reason for suspecting this individual was that [REDACTED] knew his last name to be [REDACTED] and he lived on a large estate immediately [REDACTED] [REDACTED] and [REDACTED] did not believe him to have any visible means of support. He therefore believed that [REDACTED] money must be illegal, and that was the reason he thought that individual may be identical to subject. He had no substantial information that he was identical to subject, however.

After recontacting Deputy [REDACTED] numerous times, on 2/27/80, he advised that he had not had a chance to show the photographs to [REDACTED] and that he himself had still not seen [REDACTED]. The photographs were returned by Deputy [REDACTED] at that time.

ADMINISTRATIVE

In view of the fact that there is no reason to suspect the individual referred to by [REDACTED] of being identical with subject, other than the fact that he has the name [REDACTED], no further investigation being conducted regarding this particular individual in the Atlanta Division.

[REDACTED] and [REDACTED] did not believe him to have any visible means of support. He therefore believed that [REDACTED] money must be illegal, and that was the reason he thought that individual may be identical to subject. He had no substantial information that he was identical to subject, however.

After recontacting Deputy [REDACTED] numerous times, on 2/27/80, he advised that he had not had a chance to show the photographs to [REDACTED] and that he himself had still not seen [REDACTED]. The photographs were returned by Deputy [REDACTED] at that time.

FBI geologist favors Washougal River landing for D.B.

SUBS: B, E, G, M,

By MYRON STRUCK

States News Service

WASHINGTON — Did D.B. Cooper land in, or near, the Washougal River rather than the Lewis River?

In the personal opinion of the chief FBI geologist who worked on the case, D.B. Cooper may have landed in the Washougal River, not near the Lewis River where it had been presumed that he came to earth — before about $5,600 in compressed, wet and eroded money was found along the banks of the Columbia River in February upstream from the Lewis.

The Washougal River scenario is the private view of geologist Chris Fiedler, who handled the soil analysis on the money, and not part of the agency's official report to the Seattle field office coordinating the investigation.

Still, it seems to be the only clue — that might help the investigation the FBI was able to glean from a recent analysis of the bills in its Washington, D.C., research area known as The Laboratory.

The official report says little was found on the wad of money. The basis for the new information is Fiedler's research of the sand particles found among the bills and his discussions with federal geologists in the field.

He has concluded that the range of sand particles found among the bills is similar to sediment along the Columbia River and a number of its tributaries.

Fiedler's opinion has been disavowed firmly by his mineralogy division section chief.

"He could have landed in the Columbia River," Fiedler said. "Or he could have come down in the Washougal. The latter is where my training, and instincts, tell me is more likely, based on the data I have available."

The sand tests involve little in the way of complicated equipment — only a simple microscope and some geological reference material that discusses the characteristics of sand particles.

Those found in the bills were rounded, worn and considered to have been exposed to exceptional wear and tear.

"What we didn't find, is clay or other substances," Fiedler said.

These substances could have indicated the money originally had been buried in dirt.

When the money was sent back to The Laboratory for examination, most of the bills were compressed together, but a number could be distinguished easily. Field agents had determined that the serial numbers matched those of the $200,000 Cooper skyjacking money.

The money was routed to the Laboratory's documents division, the lead division handling the case.

First, the money was dried out, using some 23-cent blotter paper, a pair of tweezers, some heat and a careful hand.

Individual bills were placed in cellophane envelopes and sent to the Latent Fingerprints Division. The sand particles associated with the bills were routed to the mineralogy section where Fiedler made his analysis.

The most impressive analysis was the use of a $36,000 experimental laser beam process to detect fingerprints.

The process was created accidentally by Xerox of Canada when it tried using laser beams to photocopy documents. Fingerprints would show up on the paper, making the process unworkable.

The substance the laser detects from fingertip contact is unknown. The device, however, has been successfully used in detecting fingerprints that were not visible through conventional chemical and powder detection.

Those conventional chemical tests also were applied to the D.B. Cooper money, seeking grease or oil fingerprint stains and amino acid fingerprint stains.

All four systems turned up nothing. The money had been exposed to the waters of the Columbia River too long. It was impossible to detect any fingerprint traces, even those of Brian Ingram, the 8-year-old boy who found the money on Tena Bar near Vancouver.

TAKE THE MONEY AND JUMP

MAY 12-18 BERKELEY BARB PAGE 11

DB Cooper-17681

HOW HE FOILED FBI

Last November 24th, a man identifying himself as "Cooper" parachuted from a Northwest Orient Airlines 727 jetliner between Seattle and Reno Nevada with a parcel containing 10,000 twenty dollar bills which was the ransom money that had been delivered to him while he held the planes crew hostage at the Seattle-Tacoma international airport.

The F.B.I. and other state and local law enforcement agents assisted by companies of G.I.'s from Fort Lewis have futilely wasted many hours and thousands of taxpayers dollars looking for Cooper.

So far Cooper has successfully eluded his following in the same ingenious manner that he pulled off his skyjack caper, coolly staying a safe distance away from danger.

The F.B.I. headquarters in Seattle has vowed to scrutinize every foot of land between the Sea-Tac airport and Reno to turn up clues in the case.

Despite rewards of 5,000 dollars by the Medias "Fink on your Friends" program the public has generally granted Cooper adoration and somewhat a hero status. An anonymous interviewer from the twice weekly newspaper the 'Seattle Flag' has produced a story from a taped interview with D.B. Cooper which is validated by the presentation of one of the recorded twenty dollar bills included in the ransom money.

This story was run in the 'Flag' because the interviewer was unable to send it to the 'Post-Intelligencer' because they had the 5,000 dollar reward out for Coopers head also television stations would have requested a tape from which voice prints could possibly be produced. Therefore, running the story in the Flag was the only solution.

Cooper said that the witnesses description were off by about fifteen pounds and a couple of inches. Also that the artist's impression were very poor. When asked why we was still in Washington state he added that he felt it was safer to hide where no one would imagine him to be, rather than to go to some place like Mexico or South America where the authorities would naturally expect him to go.

He said he started actual work on his skyjacking plan last June. The idea had come to him while he was it was a calculated risk that's why he jumped in bad weather and at night, also he waited a little longer than usual before pulling his ripcord. Adding that his free fall was about 5,000 of the total 7,000 feet. Which was very risky doing at night.

He came down about a hundred miles away from S.W. Washington contrary to the F.B.I. report that he touched down near Vancouver Washington.

The first thing he did on landing was bury his chute, he was within five miles of where he had intended in an evergreen wooded terrain. He credited this accuracy to his projected calculations and his Japanese watch. He wouldn't say whether he had an accomplice on the ground. He said he had lived in Seattle and had once two parachutes he had ordered. A stewardess came back with the money in a canvas bag to where Cooper was holding another stewardess as hostage in the rear of the passenger cabin.

Cooper checked out the loot, first thing and noticed that they reeked of duplicating fluid. Then the stewardess made two more trips out on to the run way to bring in the chutes.

Then one of the fuel trucks pulled up...then he ordered the passengers off the plane, and everyone else into the cockpit...a middle-aged, executive looking man started to push his way back through the line into the tourist cabin. Cooper tensed up expecting the guy to try something heroic - but he had just left his briefcase on his seat and was retrieving it..

The reason he was attracted to the plan was the alignment of the three Pratt & Whitney engines two on the sides of the rear fuselage and the third at the base of the T-tail assembly. Also the down-flaps stalling speed. One hundred

He figured if the F.B.I. was going to make a move it would be at Sea-Tac. Everybody but the stewardess he was holding hostage and the three man crew was clear of the plane. Buzzing the cockpit he asked the captain what the hold-up was. Trouble with the vapor lock was the answer. And another truck was coming. Cooper told the Captain: "Not more than one fuel truck at a time" but eventually the fuel truck

 Cooper said that the witnesses description were off about fifteen pounds and a couple of inches. Also that artist's impression were very poor. When asked why he was still in Washington state he added that he felt it was safer to hide where no one would imagine him to be other than to go to some place like Mexico or South America where the authorities would naturally expect him.

Cooper said he started actual work on his skyjacking plan June . The idea had come to him while he was watching T.V. He figured that skyjackers before him had fools - with their hijacking planes, to go to Cuba, risking the death penalty when all they had to do was charter a boat or go to Mexico and take a plane there!

Cooper stated that he did it for the money, realizing that the answer was not merely how to get it but rather how to get away with it. After making extensive preparations destroyed hundreds of timetables, graphs, aircraft plans, weather reports and pages of notes. He felt he had done enough preparations to be worth 200,000 dollars.

Cooper described jumping from a jet going 200 miles an hour as being cold, dark, loud, windy and scary, very scary!

Cooper had prepared to some extent with long underwear gloves but in order to remain unnoticed onboard the plane he had to sacrifice some elements of comfort. He had activated the stairs and opened the back door before he has over the touchdown area to confuse the F.B.I.....Finally using Kleenex for earplugs he stepped down to the tenth step and stepped off into the void of the wind and gravity...In the darkness he heard engines of the following planes. But he realized that worked at Boeing's on the construction of the first Boeing 727 in 1963 and got to know the 727 from the inside out.

The reason he was attracted to the plan was the alignment of the three Pratt & Whitney engines two on the sides of the rear fuselage and the third at the base of the T-tail assembly. Also the down-flaps stalling speed. One hundred and nine miles per hour which was risky but jumpable.

Then also he took into account the small crew: Three on the flight deck and the three stewardesses. Two central galleys and the wardrobes with the two toilets to the rear, figuring that they might come in handy as a place to hold a stewardess hostage.

THE ACTUAL JUMP

First the briefcase bomb was only real in the sense that it worked, it was constructed of Gillette shaving cream cans, painted red and rigged up with prima-cord fuses. When he flashed them to the stewardesses they carried out his instructions because they were well-indoctrinated and thoroughly trained. Also they obeyed instructions from Mr. Nyrop of the head of Northwest.

Nyrop figured that it was easier to pay a mere 200,000 dollars than to risk four lives and a $5 million dollar airplane. Cooper could smell xeros fluid on the money and knew that the twenties had been duplicated.

He stayed close to his original plan, only having one nervous moment when he was still negotiating on the ground at Sea-Tac airport. The fueling was being stalled, and he was getting edgy, figuring someone was planning some kind of stragey in an effort to shoot him or something. One of the pilots brought out the money and the

He figured if the F.B.I. was going to make a move it would be at Sea-Tac. Everybody but the stewardess he was holding hostage and the three man crew was clear of the plane. Buzzing the cockpit he asked the captain what the hold-up was. Trouble with the vapor lock was the answer. And another truck was coming. Cooper told the Captain: "Not more than one fuel truck at a time" but eventually five fuel trucks came out, only three of which were able to deliver. Cooper almost blew his cool, he went forward to the cockpit and told the captain it was take off time, and to take the plane to Mexico.

The plane was again airborne at 7:40 pm four hours and forty two minutes after leaving Portland.

The parachutes were unacceptable so he decided to jump without a reserve chute.. he cut the extra chute up and used the strips to tie the money to his waist.

Next he took the stewardess forward and ordered the captain to lock the door from the inside. Then he returned aft, closing the first class and tourist compartments behind him.

Then he got on the intercom and told the captain to hold the aircraft at 7,000 feet, and speed at 200 miles per hour.

Last he ordered that nobody, under any circumstances, was to attempt to make any further contact with him. Shortly after he jumped.

Cooper declared to the reporter that he was going to retire the night of the interview and head to an undisclosed destination. He said he would be back in five years, thanks to "The Statue of Limitations!"
