There has been an approach to me to see whether you would be willing to meet [redacted] privately to discuss the situation of Qatar. Ostensibly, the meeting would touch on the issues of common concern to you both e.g women's issues [redacted]

QUESTION: On Turkey?

MR. CROWLEY: Turkey.

QUESTION: I asked on Monday about the journalist who got detained. Do you have anything on that now?

[redacted]

b1
b3

[REDACTED]

MR. CROWLEY: Well, we are watching this case very closely. I don't have a particular comment other than to say we do have ongoing concerns about trends regarding treatment of journalists within Turkey. We've raised that with the Turkish Government, and we'll be watching this case very closely.

QUESTION: So you have engaged with Turkish Government so far?

MR. CROWLEY: I don't know that we have engaged in this particular case, but this is an issue that we have raised with Turkey and will continue to do so.

QUESTION: U.S. Ambassador in Ankara Ricciardone gave a couple of statements on the issue – I have the quotes – and there was a quite strong reaction from Turkish administration saying that nobody should be interfering with the Turkish domestic situation because of ambassador statement.

MR. CROWLEY: Again, obviously, Ambassador Ricciardone – we stand by his statement. But as I say, we do have broad concerns about trends involving intimidation of journalists in Turkey, and we have raised that directly with the Turkish Government and we'll continue to do so.

QUESTION: You said --

QUESTION: Two things real quick, one on Mexico. There were two --

QUESTION: Can I stay on this?

QUESTION: Oh, I'm sorry. Please.

QUESTION: Turkey.

QUESTION: Okay.

QUESTION: Also, AKP -- the vice president of ruling party AKP said that ambassadors has limits, so was Ricciardone out of his limits by having such a statement?

MR. CROWLEY: I'm not sure what you mean by limits.

QUESTION: I'm not sure, too. He said ambassadors have limits. So regarding this subject, regarding Ricciardone's --

MR. CROWLEY: You're saying that Ambassador Ricciardone used the term "limits"?

QUESTION: No, no, vice president of AKP said --

MR. CROWLEY: Again, it's not for me to parse the language used by Turkish officials. We stand by the ambassador's statement

QUESTION: There is some strong arguments in Turkey that the U.S. approach so far to Turkish Government, strong Turkish Government, kind of appeasement policy to --

MR. CROWLEY: What kind of policy?

QUESTION: Appeasement.

MR. CROWLEY: Appeasement?

QUESTION: Yes, to Turkish Government. Not - there's my newspaper's editorial yesterday, so I'm just (inaudible) message what would be your --

MR. CROWLEY: It's hard for me to put that in context. Turkey is an ally and friend of the United States. But as we've made clear, anytime that we think that a friend or ally or adversary has crossed a line and - in terms of respect for universal principles, we will not hesitate to raise our voice

This is not advice that is currently in the news. You've met the source before - a top military intel guy. Also by coincidence, I have a relative who works on the Japanese-side and is crashing here. At first her lips were pursed tight but confirmed the same:

Radiation leak from the Fukushima reactor. Don't believe what the government say. U.S. overhead intelligence has detected radiation emissions. Stay indoors if at all possible. There is nothing, no events, parties, sports, movies, etc that are worth getting more exposure to radiation. The stuff travels far, very far.

Wind is all over the place, but we must assume it is heading towards a major area like Tokyo, a city, a heat source.

As long as the radiation leak is going, and up to 24-48 hours later, the threat is at its highest in most cases. Here is a wind chart online. It shows wind all over the place, but one trend is there - winds head to Tokyo.

http://www.surfline.com/weather-forecasts/japan-wind-chart_2731

Also, power outage expected to hit about 1800 this evening as more people return home and start using more electricity. Charge any devices you have that need charging. People will draw a lot of power about 1800-1900, so expect blackouts and brownouts. Get your flashlights ready, with new batteries.

Very similar to 3-Mile Island, and maybe Chernobyl. VOA news has this take:

<http://www.voanews.com/english/news/asia/Japans-Tsunami-Death-Toll-Seen-Reaching-1000-117829978.html>

Leak has been going since last night. It is still not under control. A U.S. team was flown in to help get this thing under control, but that is not public record yet. It will come out later, I think.

Anyway, leak from last night means it is hitting us about now. I am not going outdoors for a while.

Normally one might also take K-I (Potassium Iodine) tablets as a precautionary measure. Substitutes include alternative sources of iodine including iodine or consuming seaweed (nori).

Wear a mask, and a hat if possible. Take a shower immediately after you return home and wash your clothes. Radioactive steam was released yesterday and continues today. It will likely be in the area now. What I suggest above is not costly, and not too onerous. Do it and play it safe.

~~SECRET//NOFORN~~

Don't go outdoors unless it is necessary
